The inamdar of the narva village of Dakor desired that the revenue survey should be introduced into it. The usual measurements and assessments were made, and the Superintendent of the Revenue Survey, following the analogy of the system prevalent in Government villages, held a conference with the narvadars and drew up a scheme, to which the narvadars assented, for the future management of the village and for settling the future relations between the narvadars and the inamdars as representing the fiscal interests of the Government. The narvadars agreed to retain their narva tenure along with an assessment made

NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL DEBTS ACT (XVII OF 1873).

See SUPERINTENDENCE OF HIGH COURT—CHARTER ACT, s. 15—CIVIL CASES.
[24 W. R., 311

1. ———— Right of appeal.—Act XVII of 1873 was not intended to deprive the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad of any right of appeal to the High Court which he had before it was passed. NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL v. AMRAO BEGUM 21 W. R., 59

2. ———— Submission of decree of Court as a claim to Commissioners—Power of High Court.—Certain judgment-creditors were held to have committed an error of judgment in submitting their decree to Commissioners appointed under Act XVII of 1873, as if it were a new and unascertained claim. Where this was done, and the Commissioners expressed their opinion upon the matter involved (although it had already been determined), the High Court held that it had no authority to enquire into their award. ———— s. 11—Agreement for appropriation of payments—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 60—Suit for rent.—So far as the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act is concerned, rent due by the Nawab is on the same footing as any other debt incurred by him, and before his property can be made liable to satisfy such rent debt, the consent of the Governor General in Council must first be obtained to the issue of execution. 1. ———— s. 12 —Jurisdiction of Commissioners—Parties.—The Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act (XVII of 1873) (an Act to provide for the liquidation of the debts of the Nawab Nazim, and for his protection from legal process), having ascertained and certified that a certain zamindari was nizamut property (i.e., held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being), the fact that this property had, before the passing of the Act, been conveyed by the Nawab Nazim to his son, did not deprive the Commissioners of jurisdiction to deal with the question. The plain language of s. 12 of the Act is not controlled by any words in the preamble. A suit brought by a claimant against the Government and the grantee to recover the property, without the Nawab Nazim having been joined as a party, could not proceed. 3. ——— Attachment of property in execution of decree—Failure to return property attached in satisfaction of decree—Beng. Act V of 1863, ss. 4 and 8.—In a suit brought against the plaintiff in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, a decree was obtained, and a warrant was issued for the attachment of certain moveable property belonging to the plaintiff. The warrant was addressed to the Nazir of the Collector's Court, and was by him delivered to one of the registered peons of the Court for execution. The peon reported to the Nazir that he had attached the property in question, and had placed it in charge of certain persons, whose receipt for it he produced and filed. Subsequently, the plaintiff paid the amount of the decree into Court and an order was made releasing his property from the attachment. A peon was sent to restore the property to the plaintiff, but the persons in whose charge it was said to have been left alleged that they had never taken possession of the property, and the peon was unable to restore the property to the plaintiff. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Nazir to recover the property or its value,—Held that the Nazir was not liable, Bengal Act V of 1863 having altered the relation which formerly existed between the Nazir and the peons of the Revenue Courts, and put them in the position of paid servants of Government. 4. ——— Warrant of arrest of judgment-debtor—Escape of debtor—Negligence.—The plaintiff sued out a warrant for the arrest of his judgment-debtor on the 4th December 1876. The warrant was lodged with the Nazir on the 16th December, and was to be in force till the 4th January 1877. On the 22nd December 1876 the Nazir was informed that the judgment-debtor was already in the civil jail under a writ of execution issued by another creditor. The Nazir then returned the warrant to the Subordinate Judge who had issued it. On the 29th December the Subordinate Judge again sent it to the Nazir's office, where it was duly received by the Nazir's karkun (defendant No. 2). This fact was not reported by the karkun to the Nazir (defendant No. 1) until the 4th January 1877. On the 1st January 1877 the judgment-debtor's debt was paid by Government, and he was released in honour of Her Majesty's assumption of the title of Empress of India. The judgment-debtor thereupon left the district, and could not be found, and the plaintiff's warrant remained unexecuted. The plaintiff sued the Nazir and his karkun for allowing his judgment-debtor to escape. Held that the Nazir ought not to have sent the warrant back to the Subordinate Judge, and that there was no necessity for a fresh order on it until the time which it had to run had expired. Held further that, if the Nazir forgot the existence of this unexecuted warrant

5. ——— Misrepresentation of solvency of surety by witness to surety-bond.—The plaintiff held a money-decree against M, who was arrested in execution of it. On being brought to the Court, however, M applied for his discharge as an insolvent under s. 273 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). He was released on the security of G, who executed a bond for the appearance of M at the inquiry into his insolvency. The defendant attested the bond, and wrote in the attestation that G was a solvent person. In consequence of the non-appearance of M, the plaintiff sought to execute his decree against the surety G, who, on his arrest, also applied for his disharge on the ground of his insolvency, and was discharged after inquiry. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant for the amount of his decree and cost of execution, on the ground of his representation in the attestation that G was solvent. Quære—Whether the Nazir was liable to the plaintiff for negligence in not taking a proper surety. with pegs, but the tents were taken down each monsoon. For two or three years previously to the accident, people had been accustomed to cross the land without any hindrance or prohibition. The plaintiff himself had used the path across the land, as a short cut, for a period of eighteen months. This path led across the tenting ground to a gate which was generally open, and which opened upon the high road. No express permission had ever been given to any of the persons who were in the habit of using this path. It was a mere beaten track, and, so far from being a public way, it was from time to time obstructed, in the tenting season, by the ropes and pegs of the tents. The plaintiff had for some time been in occupation of a bungalow belonging to the first defendants, which was situated in that part of the land which was furthest away from the high road. There was a regularly constructed roadway from the bungalow to the high road, which the plaintiff might have used, but, as a short cut, he and others were in the habit of using the beaten track. For this he had merely a tacit permission. On the morning of the 1st September 1885, he left his bungalow and went to his business, as usual, by the short cut across the land. When returning by the same way at about 11 o'clock at night he fell into the hole which had been dug in the afternoon of that day, and sustained the injuries complained of. The hole was several feet deep, and was dug right across the pathway. The plaintiff had no notice of the hole being dug, or of any intention to dig it. The night was very dark, and there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff, nor any want of ordinary care and caution. There was no watchman and no fence, nor was there any light which might enable persons using the path to avoid the danger. The second defendant, as above stated, had agreed to take the said land from the first defendants on lease for building purposes. On the day of the accident, some months before the execution of the lease, the second defendant through his engineer and contractor H applied to the first defendants for permission to make "borings" in the land, which permission was given. H thereupon caused the hole in question to be dug. In their written statement the first defendants contended that in using the short cut across their land, the plaintiff was a trespasser, and that he had used it without their knowledge or consent; that the hole was dug without their knowledge, and that the "borings," for which they had given permission, were merely small holes of a diameter of six inches, or thereabouts, which could not have been a source of danger. The second defendant pleaded that at the time of the accident he was not in possession of the land, but had merely entered into an agreement for a lease of it; that he had employed a competent engineer and contractor, H, to make borings, in order to ascertain of what the sub-soil consisted, and that H contracted to do the work and obtain leave from the first defendants to enter on the land; that the said H subsequently entered on the land, and according to his own discretion and without any control or interference from him (the second defendant), took such steps as he thought necessary to ascertain the nature of the said sub-soil; and he (the second defendant) contended that, if there had been negligence in the performance of the work, he was not liable. Held (1) that there was negligence in digging the hole across a path used by several licensees, and in not placing any person or light to warn passengers of the danger arising from the hole and the excavated earth which was heaped up near it. Held (2) that the first defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. The permission which they had given to H was a permission to make "borings" only; and the hole, which was actually dug by H, was dug without their knowledge or permission. H was not shown to be in any sense their servant or agent. The plaintiff was a bare licensee, and the first defendants were under no obligation to him to keep the path in a safe state or in good order. Held (3) that the second defendant was liable to the plaintiff. H was not a contractor, in the legal sense, so as to exempt the second defendant from responsibility, but was the servant of the second defendant pro hâc vice, and that the digging of the hole was within the course of his employment, or within the scope of his authority. The Court of first instance awarded, as damages, a sum of R33,000, which, on appeal, was reduced to R17,000. EVANS v. TRUSTEES OF THE PORT OF BOMBAY

6. ———— Suit for damages by parents of a child killed by negligence—Act XIII of 1855—Death by negligence—Contributory negligence—Liability for negligence of servants—Damages, Assessment of—Deduction for maintenance of child—Funeral expenses.—The plaintiff's unmarried daughter, a child of between five and six years old, fell into an open manhole of a sewer in a lane in Bombay on the 20th August 1880, between 4½ and 5 o'clock P.M., and, when her body was recovered, life was extinct. The sewer was vested in the Municipality of Bombay, and was under the control of the Municipal Commissioner by virtue of ss. 220 and 289 of the Bombay Municipal Act of 1888. When such manholes are opened, it is the duty of the Municipal Commissioner under s. 321 of that Act to have them properly fenced and guarded. On the 28th August 1890 the manhole in question was opened for the purpose of inserting a flushing-door in the sewer. From the time the manhole was opened until the occurrence of the accident the deceased child's mother was seated at the corner of the street selling cucumbers about four yards from the manhole in question. The hole was at first properly fenced with four timber hurdles about 4 feet high set upright round it at a distance of 2 feet from the hole, secured at the corners with ropes. Soon after 4-30 P.M., the superintendent in charge of the work gave orders to cease work and close the manhole for the night. The accident took place almost immediately afterwards. The Judge found on the evidence that the child fell into the open hole in the interval that elapsed between the taking down of the fence and putting the cover on the hole. What she was doing the instant before she fell, there was nothing to show. She was seen running and playing about the street during the afternoon. Her mother, who was sitting close by, did not see the accident, her attention being

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON—

Act V of 1866, the Act mentioned in the following cases, was repealed and its provisions re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, 1882, ss. 532, 538.

1. ———— Return of summons—Procedure.—In a suit under Act V of 1866, the summons should be returned in the usual way; and after the expiration of the required time, an order of the Court or a decree should be obtained. SCHILLER v. MARKER . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 283

2. ———— Time to obtain leave to defend—Act V of 1866, s. 3.—Although Act V of

1866, s. 3, only gives the defendant seven days to get leave to come in and defend on action on a bill, note, etc., the Court must be satisfied before granting a decree that the defendant has had a full opportunity to obtain leave to defend. GROB v. PALMER
[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 395

3. ———— Extension of time for appearance—Jurisdiction.—Where, in a suit under Act V of 1866, the defendant is at such a distance as would make it impossible for him to put in an appearance within the seven days allowed by the Act, the Court will stay execution for a time long enough to allow him to appear. Suits cannot be brought under this Act against persons resident out of the jurisdiction. CHANDRAKANT ROY v. POGOSE
[3 B. L. R., O. C., 83

4. ———— Leave to appear and defend—Practice—Costs.—The Court will give leave to a defendant to appear and defend in suits under Act V of 1866, where he shows a defence apparently real; but where there is a doubt as to the bonâ fides of the defence, payment of money into Court will be ordered or security directed to be given. The Court has, in giving leave to defend, a discretion to order security for costs, not only where it doubts the bonâ fides of the defence, but also if it considers the matter of defence raised is unnecessary, though allowable. If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, the Court will always allow him to come in afterwards and show that the leave ought not to have been granted, or, if granted at all, in more stringent terms. VONLINTZGY v. NARAYAN SING . . . . 6 B. L. R., Ap., 64

5. ———— Leave to defend.—In an action on a promissory note under this Act the defendant was allowed to come in and defend after the plaintiff had obtained a decree; the decree was set aside and written statements ordered. JOSEPH v. SOLANO

6. ———— Notarial protest—Evidence of dishonour—Hundi—Bill of exchange.—A notarial protest of any bill of exchange noted at any time after the passing of Act V of 1866 is primâ facie evidence that the bill has been dishonoured under s. 13 of that Act, although the sections relating to summary procedure on bills of exchange did not come into operation till May 1st, 1866. A hundi, which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee, and accepted by him, is within the terms of the Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement, if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. and it was stated in the deed that half the mortgage-money due to K on the mortgage of 1869 was due by the executants, and that they accordingly left the same with the mortgagees in order that the latter might redeem. In November 1876 H's 5 biswas share, together with its sír land, was sold in execution of a decree. Subsequently, K, alleging that the mortgagees under the deed of 1872 and the purchasers under the execution-sale of 1876 had dispossessed him, and that his mortgage-debt had not been paid, sued to recover possession of the 87 bighas of sír land, by virtue of his mortgage-deed of 1869. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce his mortgage in respect of F's and W's share in the 87 bighas, because they were not parties to the deed of 1869. The lower Appellate Court further held that from the date of the execution-sale of November 1876 H became an ex-proprietary tenant of his sír land, and that to give the plaintiff possession thereof would be contrary to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 (N.-W. P. Rent Act). Held that, inasmuch as it was clear that at the time when the mortgage-deed of 1869 was executed F and W were aware of the transaction which made K, the mortgagee, under the deed, of the whole property, and that, knowing this, they allowed the possession of A, J, and H to appear as if covering the entire zamindari rights in the 10 biswas share of the sír land, and inasmuch as the statements contained in the mortgage-deed of 1872 were an admission on the part of F and W that the mortgage of 1869 was executed with their consent, the equitable doctrine contained in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and F and W had no defence, either in law or in equity, to the plaintiff's suit, with reference to their shares, and for the purpose of obviating the lien of 1869. Ramcoomar Koondoo v. Mcqueen, 11 B. L. R., 46, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J., with reference to the effect of the execution-sale of November 1876, in regard to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873, that the general rule that statutory provisions have no retrospective operation did not apply to the case; that, by reason of the sale, H, who had proprietary rights in the mehal, and held the 5 biswas share of the sír as such (the word "held" as used in s. 7 of the Rent Act not being confined to manual or physical holding), lost his proprietary rights, and so became an ex-proprietary tenant of the land belonging to him at that time; that although the mortgage of 1869 must not be so affected as to deprive the mortgagee of all his rights, yet by the terms of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 and by virtue of the sale his means of benefiting by the mortgage were necessarily changed; that neither the preamble nor s. 1 of the Act contained any saving clause which would justify the interpretation that all the conditions included in a usufructuary mortgage are to be exempted from the operation of the Act, or of s. 7 in particular, merely because the mortgage was a subsisting one: that under these circumstances possession must be given to the plaintiff of such rights as H had at the time of the mortgage, subject only to H's rights as an ex-proprietary tenant; that the rights of the purchaser of H's share under the sale were subject to the mortgage of 1869; and that by virtue of the rule enunciated in s 48 of the Transfer of Property Act, the rights of the mortgagees under the deed of 1872, must give way to the incidents of the prior deed of 1869, both mortgages being usufructuary. Tulshi v. Radha Kishan, Weekly Notes, All., 1886, p. 74, referred to. Per TYRRELL, J., that in 1876, by reason of the execution sale, the sír rights and interests of H mortgaged by him in 1869, as such, went out of existence, and assumed a different character; that over that tenure in its altered character the plaintiff, though he still had his mortgage charge, had not, in the existing state of the law, a right to physical possession of the actual land; and that, subject to this new right of H's, the plaintiff retained his mortgage charge of 1869 over the zamindari interest in the portion of the land acquired by H's vendees. The plaintiff had acquired the share of S by auction-purchase, S thus becoming an ex-proprietary tenant. The sír land was not included in the rent-roll of the mehal, but was admitted by the defendant to be assessable with rent at a certain rate per bigha. Held that, whatever might be the course proper to be taken for the purpose of assessing such sír land or S's share of it with rent, and notwithstanding that such course had not been taken, the plaintiff was entitled in this suit to claim and obtain his share in the profits of the sír land. 1. ———— Land in mehal held by the lambardar as "khud-kasht" at a nominal rental—Liability of lambardar to co-sharer for profits.—The land in a certain mehal was recorded as held by M, the lambardar as "khud-kasht" at a certain nominal rental. For two years in succession M sublet such land in part or in whole for a less amount than such nominal rental; the third year such land lay fallow. Certain persons sued as co-sharers in the mehal to recover from M their share of the profits on account of such years. M set up as a defence to the suit that there were no profits—on the contrary, a small loss. The lower Courts held M answerable for the rental recorded. Held that it was doubtful whether the provisions of s. 209 of Act XVIII of 1873 were applicable in the present case, and that, even if such provisions were applicable, the lower Courts having neither found that more was realized from the land than had been accounted for by M, nor that the failure to realize more was owing to gross negligence or misconduct on his part, the decree of the lower Courts could not be sustained. No orders were passed by the Committee on such application because it had come by post On the 18th April 1879 the plaintiffs sued the Committee for a declaration of their right to establish a market on such land and for a perpetual injunction restraining the Collector as President of the Committee from interfering with their so doing The cause of action alleged was the refusal of the Committee of the 26th November 1878 Held by STUART, C J, on the question whether such suit was barred by the provisions of s 43 of Act XV of 1873 not having been brought within three months next after the date of the alleged cause of action, that it was not so barred, inasmuch as the provisions of that section were only applicable to suits brought against a Committee for something done under that Act in which compensation was claimed and not to those in which compensation was not claimed and that therefore the present suit was not governed by the provisions of that section but by art 120 sch II of Act XV of 1877 Also that the rejection of the lessee's application gave the plaintiffs a cause of action, as there was privity between them and the lessee, and that, as there was nothing in the Municipal rules prohibiting the presentation of an application by post, the application of the plaintiffs should not have been rejected. Held by DUTHOIT J that the suit of the plaintiffs was governed by the provisions of s. 43 of Act XV of 1873 and was therefore beyond time Municipal Committee of Moradabad v Chatri Singh I L R 1 All 269 Manni Kasaundhan v Crooke I L R 2 All 296 and Chunder Sikhur Bundopadhya v Obhoy Churn Bagchi, I L R, 6 Calc 8 referred to BRIJ MOHAN SINGH v COLLECTOR OF ALLAHABAD

1. ———— s. 55—Municipal Board—Power of Municipal Boards to frame bye-laws—N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act (XV of 1873), s. 22—Nuisance.—Cl. (c) of s. 55 of Act XV of 1883 was not intended to empower a Municipal Board to make rules which would enable it to confiscate private rights without making any compensation, or to treat as nuisances acts which are not in law or with regard to public health or convenience capable of being considered nuisances. The clause was meant to give to Municipal Boards power to make rules for prohibiting the establishment of markets, that is, to prevent new markets being established, and to give them power to control the maintenance of existing markets or of markets which might be established with their sanction. By "maintenance" is meant the keeping up of a market in such a manner as would make it a fit place for the carrying on of a market having regard to public health and public convenience. 2. ———— and s. 71—Municipal rules—Infringement of rules—Prosecutions—N.-W. P. Government Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869—Rule VI, Legality of.—Municipal Boards and Magistrates should see that, before prosecutions are instituted under the municipal rules, care is taken that the requirements of s. 69 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act) are satisfied. A District Magistrate, who was also Chairman of a Municipal Board, having information that a certain person had evaded the payment of octroi duty, directed his prosecution for breach of municipal rules. The Magistrate in thus causing proceedings to be taken, acted wholly of his own motion and authority. The accused was tried and convicted under Rule 6, Government, N.-W. P., Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869, read with s. 45 of Act XV of 1873 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act). This rule provided that any person evading or abetting the evasion of the octroi duties specified in a schedule should be deemed to have committed an infringement of a bye-law. It purported to have been made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868 (Municipal Improvements Act, N.-W. P.), which authorized the making of "rules as to the persons by whom, and the manner in which, any assessment of taxes under this Act shall be confirmed, and for the collection of such taxes." Held that, assuming the rule to have been legally made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868, which was not clear, and that it was saved by s. 2 of Act XV of 1873, it would, as declared in s. 71 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act), continue in force until repealed by new rules made under such last-mentioned Act, and be deemed to have been made under that Act, and its operation was therefore subject to the provisions of that Act, and among them to s. 69, which made it a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution against the petitioner, that there should be a complaint of the Municipal Board or of some person authorized by the Board in that behalf. Held that the position of the Magistrate of the district in connection with s. 69 was neither better nor worse than that of any other member of the Board, and unless he had been duly authorized by the Board as a Board, he had no more locus standi to cause a prosecution to be instituted personally than any other individual member; and the words of s. 69 being mandatory, and the petitioner having from the outset urged this objection to the legality of the proceedings, he was entitled to the benefit of it now, and the conviction was illegal and must be set aside. A Magistrate cannot take upon himself to decide questions of fact and Mahomedan law, so as to satisfy himself as to what are the actual rights of the parties to the lands in dispute. If he has good reasons to believe that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, the law enables him to ascertain and maintain actual possession, or, if it is shewn that the members of the family are inclined to break the peace, he can bind them all over to keep the peace. Where there was a dispute between the parties, who were related to one another as to the amount of their shares to certain property which was claimed on the one hand to be joint in certain shares, and on the other hand to exclusively belong to the other party, and no proceedings had been taken under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor was there anything to show that there was any probability of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate passed the following order: "The applicants must not plough more than 12 annas of the land." Held that such an order could not properly fall within s 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as an order under that section could only be passed on some emergency and would have effect for only two months. A civil suit was then filed, and during its pendency a second application was made under s. 133 of Act X of 1882, with a like object, which was refused on the ground that the civil suit was pending, and that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. The civil suit resulted in the way being held to be a public thoroughfare. A third application was then made under s. 133 to have the obstruction removed, but the Magistrate held that in face of the two previous orders he could not interfere. Held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong, upon the ground that he was bound to make such inquiry, and as there never had been any inquiry

A jury of five persons was appointed by the Magistrate's successor, under s. 310, to report within fifteen days whether the order was reasonable and proper. The jurors, being without instruction, took different views as to the performance of their duties; but four of them visited the premises, and were unanimous in finding that the building complained of was not on the high road at all. Five days after receiving reports to this effect, the Magistrate issued another order to the petitioner, requiring him to pull down his house within fifteen days, as the jurors had made no report within the time prescribed. The petitioner showed cause under s. 313, but without effect, and the order was repeated. The proceedings were ultimately forwarded to the Sessions Judge, whose successor in office returned them with the remark that nothing appeared to have been done contrary to the law for the removal of nuisances. Held that the petitioner had shown sufficient cause to satisfy the Magistrate, under s. 313, that the order to pull down the house was not reasonable and proper. 96. ———— Functions of jury—Obstruction—Public thoroughfare—Procedure.—Before a Magistrate can make an order under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to remove an obstruction from a path alleged to be a public thoroughfare, he must first, in a proceeding held under s. 532, have come to the conclusion that the path is open to the use of the public. The only functions which a jury appointed under s. 523 can exercise are to consider whether the order made by the Magistrate under s. 521 is reasonable and proper, it being no part of their duty to determine the rights of parties in property. Held therefore that where a Magistrate, through a mistaken view of the law, ordered the removal of an obstruction on a pathway under s. 521, and had further submitted this order to the consideration of a jury appointed under s. 523, before he had himself come to a conclusion whether such pathway was a public thoroughfare, the only course left open to him under such circumstances was to stay all proceedings initiated under s. 521, and take action under s. 532. 127. ———— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 268, 283-290.—The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar, I. L. R., 14 Calc., 656, considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river constitutes an offence under s. 290, is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river where it was about 300 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could

On the 11th May 1895 certain persons, in defiance of this order, cremated a corpse at the spot interdicted, and were convicted under ss. 188 and 290 of the Penal Code, but the conviction under s. 188 was reversed on appeal. Held that, when persons entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incidental to such an act as is generally performed in this country, they cannot be convicted of a public nuisance on the ground that their act caused material annoyance and discomfort to persons near the place on the occasion referred to. Held further that the order of the District Magistrate was not warranted by s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law, and must therefore be set aside. 2 ———— Omission to take evidence on oath or affirmation—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 118—Competency of persons of tender years—The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the administration to him of an oath or affirmation and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed In determining the question of competency the Court, under s 118 of the Evidence Act has not to enter into inquiries as to the witness's religious belief, or as to his knowledge of the consequences of falsehood in this world or the next It has to ascertain, in the best way it can whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard or done on a particular occasion If a person of tender years or of very advanced age can satisfy these requirements, his competency as a witness is established. Having regard to the language of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) a Court has no option, when once it has elected to take the statements of a person as evidence but to administer to such person either an oath or affirmation as the case may require Queen Empress v Maru, I L R, 10 All, 207, referred to In a trial for murder before the Court of Session, one of the witnesses was a boy of twelve years of age, and in answer to questions put by the Sessions Judge, he said that he worshipped Debi and understood the difference between truth and falsehood; that he did not know what would be the consequences here and hereafter of telling lies, but that he would tell the truth The Sessions Judge proceeded to record the boy's statement but without administering to him any oath or affirmation Held that there was nothing in law to sanction this procedure on the part of the Judge The High Court required the attendance of the boy and of the accused, and, having satisfied itself of the competency of the former to depose as a

The expression "party to a judicial proceeding" in s. 8 of the Act does not include either the complainant or the accused in a criminal case. In the course of a trial on a charge of assault the complainant's pleader agreed to be bound by the evidence on oath of a material witness, provided he swore on the Gita (a sacred book of the Hindus). The witness took the required oath, and stated that there was no assault, but merely a taking held of the hand. The Magistrate did not believe this witness, and proceeded with the trial. evidence to be considered in the case together with the other evidence. In this case there was abundant other evidence, all of which was in favour of the plaintiff, and his refusal to take the oath did not necessarily constitute a sufficient reason to set aside that evidence. A party who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary confers by so doing on his statement the character of conclusive proof, but his mere refusal to make the oath does not, under the terms of the Oaths Act (X of 1873), justify any legal presumption against him. IV of 1797—Act XVII of 1862—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s 6—Repeal of statute, Effect of—Right of defence to High Court.*—Up to the 1st January 1862, a person committing the offence of murder was liable to trial and punishment under the Regulations. By Act XVII of 1862 the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences were repealed "except as to any offence committed before the 1st January 1862." By the same Act it was declared that no person who should claim the same should be deprived of any right of appeal or reference which he would have enjoyed under such Regulations By s. 6 of Act I of 1868, the repeal of an Act does not affect anything done, or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred before the repealing Act shall have come into operation. Under the provisions of this section, the repeal of Act XVII of 1862 by Act VIII of 1868 and Act X of 1872 did not, in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, affect the penalties prescribed by such Regulations, nor were any of the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences, which were in force before the passing of Act XVII of 1862, repealed in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, prior to the passing of Act I of 1868. Held accordingly, where a person committed murder in the year 1855, that such person was punishable under the Regulations. Held also that, inasmuch as such right as the right of reference given by s. 3 of Regulation IV of 1797 accrues on conviction, and therefore in the present case had not accrued before Act XVII of 1862 was repealed, it is doubtful whether a person convicted of murder committed before the 1st January 1862 has such right. 4. ——— Official Trustees Act (XVII of 1864), ss. 10, 15, and 17—Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act (XXVIII of 1866), s. 34—Indian Trustee Act (XXVII of 1866), ss. 6 and 26.—"Property," Meaning of—"Vesting," Meaning of.—The main purpose of the Official Trustees Act was to place the Official Trustee and his successors in office in the same position and vested with the same powers as the persons who held the property in trust previous to the appointment of the Official Trustee, and a wide meaning must be given to the words "property" and "vest." That "property" in the Official Trustees Act was meant also to include action or actionable claims, and the vesting thereof was intended to have the effect of giving the Official Trustee complete power of enforcing all claims or demands in respect of the trust estate. The plaintiff, as a creditor of S E E, had obtained letters of administration to his estate and now brought this suit for the recovery of R12,000 on a mortgage which had been executed in favour of S E E. S E E in his lifetime was the trustee of a sum of R70,000, and the Official Trustee, who had been appointed trustee in his place and who was made a defendant in this suit, claimed the benefit under the said mortgage on the allegation that the said sum had been advanced by S E E out of the trust funds. The plaintiff contended that she was entitled to the usual mortgage decree and to get in the money thereunder, and that the proper course for the rival claimants to the money represented by the plaintiff in her personal capacity on the one side and the Official Trustee on the other was then to proceed to establish their rights to the money by separate suit or otherwise. Held that the contention of the plaintiff was not correct, and the Court was bound to determine the question raised by the plaintiff representing the estate of the deceased and the Official Trustee representing the trust estate, and that the Official Trustee could adduce evidence in this suit to shew that the money was advanced out of the trust estate. 2. ACCOUNT BOOKS, ENTRIES IN.

3. ———— Suit for possession—Dispute as to whether transaction was a mortgage or sale—Entries in account books showing debts.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been mortgaged to the defendant by their father under two documents. The defendant produced them and relied upon them as deeds of sale which conveyed to him absolutely the lands mentioned in them. The form of the instruments was not conclusive, but it appeared aliunde by the conduct of the defendant himself that the deeds were intended as mere securities for money, and that he had treated them as such. Certain entries in the defendant's accounts also treated the respective considerations named in the deeds as continuing debts due to the defendant from the plaintiffs' father. Held that the entries, when put in evidence, were sufficient to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiffs to the defendant, and that it was incumbent on the latter to give either oral or documentary evidence which in some way neutralised or explained away their effect, or showed that they related to other transactions than those mentioned in the two documents. 10. ———— Negligence—Hiring—Accident—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 150, 151, 150.—The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. In some cases, from the nature of the accident, it lies upon the bailee to account for its occurrence, and thus to show that it has not been caused by his negligence. In such cases it is for him to give a primâ facie explanation in order to shift the burden of proof to the person who seeks to make him liable. If he gives an explanation which is uncontradicted by reasonable evidence of negligence, and is not primâ facie improbable, the Court is bound in law to find in his favour, and the mere happening of the accident is not sufficient proof of negligence. S hired a horse from W, and while it was in his custody it died from rupture of the diaphragm, which was proved to have been caused by over-exertion on a full stomach. 37. ———— Suit for value of goods taken in execution where a claim to them is allowed under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859—Evidence of title.—M, to whom C, his judgment-debtor, had made over certain goods, attached the same in execution of his decree as the property of his judgment-debtor, but, on a claim being preferred to the goods by D and B under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, they were ordered to be released from attachment; they remained, however, in the possession of M. D and B having sued M to recover the value of the goods, the lower Court held that, inasmuch as M failed to sue within a year to set aside the order of the miscellaneous department, and to establish his right to take the property in satisfaction of his decree as belonging to his judgment-debtor, the plaintiff's right to it must be admitted without further enquiry or proof, and decreed the claim on the basis of that order alone. It was held in special appeal that the defendant was not debarred by that order or by the law of limitation from disputing the plaintiff's right to the goods, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their right to entitle themselves to a decree, and that the miscellaneous order was not conclusive proof of their right, and still less such an adjudication on the question as precluded a readjudication of it. 76. ———— Voluntary deed—Suit by settlor to set aside his deed.—One M (the original plaintiff) was priest in the family of the first and second defendants, and was treated with much kindness by the first defendant (N), upon whom he chiefly relied for advice in worldly matters. A sum of R30,000, which was the bulk of his property, was in deposit in the defendants' firm at interest. Early in 1887 he became ill, and in June 1887 he expressed a wish to execute a trust-deed and an English will. He gave instructions to N for the trust-deed. By this deed, which contained no power of revocation, he settled R30,000 upon the first and second defendants (who were uncle and nephew), as trustees to perform his funeral ceremonies and to carry out certain religious observances and to pay two annuities, each of R25, and with the residue to found a Sanskrit class. The deed provided for the payment during his lifetime, of a sum of R100 per mensem for his maintenance and expenses, or such larger sum as he might require for such purposes, but in other respects it was not to come into operation until after his death. The will of even date gave certain property to his wife, and subject to this bequest gave the residue of his property to his sister. After receiving instructions for these documents, N took them to an attorney. From these instructions drafts were prepared, which were read over to M in his room by the attorney's managing clerk. Neither drafts, nor instructions, nor the documents themselves were, however, left with M. The drafts were then engrossed, M having made some trifling corrections in them. On the 23rd June 1887 he attended at the house of the attorney. The documents were explained to him by the attorney, and were interpreted to him by a High Court interpreter. M was then examined by a medical man with a view to ascertain whether he was capable of understanding what he was doing. M then executed the trust-deed and the will, and both were then duly attested. At the same time M signed the accounts in the defendants' books, and the balance of the money, which stood to his credit over and above the R30,000 comprised in the deed, was produced and made over to him, and he made it over to N to be kept by him personally. Shortly after this, M's sister and her son came to Bombay, and he fell under their influence. He became dissatisfied with what he had done with the R30,000, and on the 21st November 1887 he executed a will by which he purported to remove the deed and the will of the 23rd June, and he left the whole of his property to his sister. On the 2nd September 1888 his nephew took him to Surat, and on the 14th September 1888 at Surat he executed a deed revoking the trust-deed of the 23rd June 1887. He also signed instructions and a power-of-attorney under which this suit was filed. He died subsequently to the filing of the suit, and his

90. ———— Proof of consideration—Promissory note—Suit by professional money-lender against a young man recently come of age—Presumption—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 118—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (c).—Professional money lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes. The defendant, who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case: (1) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of ill. (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). (2) Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant (3) The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence In the absence of this the ordinary presumption laid down in s 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, viz, that until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration MOTI GULABCHAND v MAHOMED MEHDI THARIA TOPAN should not have been admitted in evidence, in reference to ss 76 and 77 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and also that, assuming the false statement of income to have been made it still remained unproved by the defendant that the acknowledged consideration had not been paid The judgment of the Appellate Court was affirmed by their Lordships, who concurred in the opinion that the returns if the plaintiff had wrongly omitted to make a full return of income, would not have had any weight in changing the onus which lay upon the defendant of showing that no consideration had passed for this mortgage ALI KHAN BAHADUR v INDAR PERSHAD . 98. ———— Non-receipt of full consideration—Suit on bond.—In a suit for money due on a bond between the representatives of the original parties to it, the defendant attempted to reduce the claim on the ground that the money had not been received in full, the bond having been given partly in respect of an old debt, and partly in respect of a credit, in account, upon which the debtor had not, in fact, drawn certain items. The Judicial Committee concurred with the High Court, which had reversed so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as disallowed these items; the latter Court not having correctly adjusted the burden of proof, and having acted as if the plaintiff had relied on his own books to prove the debt, besides having erred in weighing the evidence. The defendant in his written statement, as well as in his deposition, admitted execution of the bonds in question, but pleaded non-receipt of consideration. The Subordinate Judge held that the bond for R200 was not proved, but awarded the claim upon the other bond On appeal, one of the issues raised by the Assistant Judge was—are the bonds in suit proved? He held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove execution of the bonds, and dismissed the claim in toto. Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the defendant having admitted execution of the bonds in question, the Assistant Judge acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction in raising the question of the execution. The first rule of adjudication is that a Judge shall decide secundum allegata et probata. The only question that could be tried in the present case was non-receipt of consideration. They also pleaded payment to plaintiff's undivided younger brother, which payment, they contended, was binding on the plaintiff. Held that plaintiff was entitled to sue for the family debt without joining his undivided brothers, the contract on which the suit was based being in plaintiff's sole name and not purporting to have been obtained on behalf of any others but himself. And that, as to the payment pleaded, if true, plaintiff was, as regards the promisor, the only person primâ facie entitled to payment; it therefore lay on the promisor to show that a payment to a third party was binding on the plaintiff, which had not been done. The contention that payment to any member of the family was by itself necessarily binding on the member who took the contract, could not be supported. ADAIKKALAM CHETTI v. MARIMUTHU . I. L. Both managed the joint property for the common benefit. Each used to recover debts due on bonds taken in the other's name. In 1890 defendant passed a bond to A. In 1892 he passed a mortgage bond to B, the consideration for which was stated to be the balance due on the former bond. 1878, leaving a widow B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child of eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the date of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead, and, there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died, or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. Per FARRAN, C.J. — Where a deed of gift or will confers an estate upon a named person, because he fills or by reason of his filling a certain character, he is entitled to recover the estate without affirmatively proving that he fills such character. 153. ———— Suit to enforce the mortgage against son's shares—Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest, should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity, or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a decree was obtained against the father and a sale effected, the presumption is that the decree was properly made. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father and in which family property was hypothecated no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity, or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. It is also necessary when money-lenders in this country seek to enforce against the property of a Hindu family a contract of mortgage made by a reversioner, who, although of age at the time, was then still of tender years and without experience of business; for the Court, when the question is raised, to be satisfied that the reversioner understood the nature of the transaction and the effect of the contract which he was entering into, or that the reversioner of the family property, in which the reversioner had an estate in expectancy only, was liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage is sought to be enforced, and that no unfair advantage was taken of the reversioner's youth and inexperience. 179. ———— Alienation by manager of infant's estate—Presumption of bonâ fides—Obligation of purchaser to inquire—Necessity for charge.—Under the Hindu law, the right of a bonâ fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. The question as to the onus of proof in such cases is one not capable of a general and inflexible answer, but the presumption proper to be made will vary with circumstances. Thus, a mortgagee, who is setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he knew to be limited, must prove the facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged deeds of the estate and the motives influencing his immediate loan; but such proof must not be required from one not an original party, after a lapse of time and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence. Where, also, a charge is created by the substitution of a new security for an older one, and the consideration for the older one was an old precedent debt of an ancestor not previously questioned, the presumption will arise in favour of a consideration that binds the estate. The lender is bound to inquire into the necessity for the charge, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so inquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. 181. ———— Sale of property of minor or person under disqualification by party in fiduciary position—Proof of bonâ fides.—When a person, after attaining majority, questions any sale of his property made by his guardian during his minority, the burden lies on the person who upholds the purchase not only to show that, under the circumstances of the case, either the guardian had the power to sell or that the purchaser reasonably supposed he had such power, but, further, that the whole transaction, so far as regarded the purchaser's part in it, was bonâ fide. Following the principle laid down by the Court in the case of Kanailal Jowhari v. Kaminee Dabee, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 31 note, it was held that, when either the person who sells labours under disqualification, or the purchaser stands in a fiduciary relation to the owner of the property, the bonâ fides of the dealing cannot be presumed, but must be made out by the purchaser. 182. ———— Suit to set aside sale made by guardian—Act XL of 1858, s. 18—Fraud or collusion—Purchaser.—Where a plaintiff alleges fraud or illegality as a ground for setting aside a sale made under s 18, the onus lies upon him to make out a primâ facie case of fraud or illegality, and to show that the debt, which formed the consideration for the sale in such case, was one for which the minor was not responsible. Per PRINSEP, J.—A stranger purchasing from a guardian, acting under the authority granted under s. 18 of Act XL of 1858, will be entitled to every protection from the Courts, so long as it is not shown that he acted in a fraudulent or collusive manner, knowing that the debts, for the liquidation of which the purchase-money would be applied, were not debts lawfully binding on the minor. The burden of proof in such a case would lie heavily on the person seeking to set aside the alienation. But where the purchaser is himself the creditor, and therefore has the means of satisfying a Court as to the origin and nature of the debts and how they are binding on the minor, the burden of proof is shifted on the purchaser, when the plaintiff has established a primâ facie case. 275. ——————— Disposition—Presumption—Onus probandi—Limitation—Joint owners, Adverse possession between.—Under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession and the cause of action is dispossession, the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years. Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. Many acts which would be clearly adverse, and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction. Possession, however, is not necessarily the same as actual user. When therefore the plaintiff has to prove possession of land in dispute within the statutory period of limitation, if there is anything special in the character of the land, for example, when it is permanently or temporarily incapable of actual enjoyment in any one of the customary modes, a presumption in favour of continuance of possession, though in no sense a conclusive one, may arise. Mahomed Ali Khan v. *Abdul Gunny, I. As a general rule, a plaintiff must not only show he has a title, but that he has a subsisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive section of the Limitation Act. The probable explanation of the ruling in *Radha Gobind Roy's case, 7 C. L. 300. ———————— Right to alluvial land—Change in course of river—Boundaries.—Disputed settlement.—At the permanent settlement the River Gunduck divided mouzah Sohagpore (zillah Tirhoot) from the village of Dumri (zillah Sarun). In 1837 the river got into its southern channel, and a quantity of chur land to the north was resumed by Government and settled with the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1846 it was again settled with the same zamindars, who remained in possession until 1848, when the river having returned to its northern channel the deara land was claimed by proprietors on the southern or Sarun side of the river: the consequence was an Act IV of 1840 suit which was decided in favour of the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1856, on the expiry of the last temporary settlement, the question arose with whom Government should engage for the revenue, and it was finally decided by the Board of Revenue that a settlement should be made with the zamindars of Dumri, who accordingly obtained possession. The Board's decision proceeded on two principles,—viz., that a usage existed that the main channel of the Gunduck should be the boundary of the zamindaries, and that therefore the interest of the zamindars of Sohagpore had been of a limited, temporary, and conditional character. These zamindars then brought a suit to impeach this settlement and to recover possession. After decision, appeal, and remand, it was finally decided by the High Court that the land in dispute was identical with that formerly settled with the maliks of Sohagpore, who (it was assumed) had a permanent proprietary interest therein. Held that the proper issues to be tried were: first, whether the land had been settled in 1837 with the maliks of Sohagpore as proprietors of alluviums which had gradually accreted to their estate, or upon what other grounds such settlement was made, the onus of proving gradual accretion being on the plaintiffs; and, secondly, whether there was at the permanent settlement, and has been since, a clear and definite usage such as supposed by the Board of Revenue, the burden of proving the affirmative of this being on the defendant RAJENDUR PERTAB SAHEE v. LALLJEE SAHOO

308. ——— Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 142, 144—Boundaries, Dispute as to—Ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil contested between proprietors of contiguous estates—Prior possession of land by one of two claimants — Presumption as to continuance of possession of land by original owner, limitation being pleaded by party in possession.— In suits relating to disputed boundaries where the decision of the lower Court as to the ownership involves questions of the correctness of surveys, maps, recorded description, and other such evidence, the appellant should do more than show points requiring explanation. He should be prepared to show in what respect the decision has been wrong in regard to the evidence, and what other course would be right. The question was as to the ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil within the confines of one or other of two adjoining revenue mehals, the one belonging to the plaintiff, the other to the defendants, and involved the identification of the land in suit with some that had been covered with water, but of which the plaintiff's possession, with title, had been affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. In consequence of the nature and condition of the land, there was no evidence of any act of possession done by either party during the first two years of the twelve immediately preceding the date of the institution of the suit, and during the last ten years the defendants had been in possession. The latter, having tried and failed to establish adverse possession in themselves, contended that, even if the plaintiff's possession had been shown to have existed in 1857, he could not succeed without his showing that his possession remained till later than the 9th April 1869, the suit having been filed on 9th April 1881, or unless he proved some act of dispossession by the defendants within that period. Held that the presumption was in favour of the plaintiff's possession, which had been with apparent title, having in fact continued over the two years in question, as to which continuance there was no evidence to the contrary. If the burden was on the plaintiff to show possession down to within twelve years of suit, it had been discharged. RAJKUMAR ROY v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY [I. L. R., 19 Calc., 660 L. R., 19 I. A., 140

In each case the plaintiff must plead his title, and if that title is in issue he must make it out by at least primâ facie evidence before the defendant can be put to proof of his defence Where the defence is twelve years' adverse possession the defendant must plead and make out the title he alleges and thus show that the title of the plaintiff which otherwise had been proved or admitted, was lost In a suit for possession of land by redemption of mortgage, the very nature of which presupposes that the possession of the defendant or his predecessor was lawful, the plaintiff must in his plaint show the title upon which he relies, and therefore a title subsisting at the date of suit. The deed of conveyance was not forthcoming, nor was the alleged mortgage-deed. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the mortgage was not proved. The Court of first instance called upon the defendant to prove his title as a son by adoption, notwithstanding that the plaintiff was out of possession, and could not have succeeded, in the event of the defendant's failure to prove it, without first proving his own title as collateral heir by descent: thus in effect, proposing to make the establishment of the plaintiff's title depend upon the failure or success of the defendant in proving the adoption. But where he proves himself to have peaceably enjoyed possession for a considerable time, the person who has recently dispossessed him has to meet the presumption of law that the plaintiff's possession indicates his ownership. In a suit for possession of immoveable property and other reliefs, it was proved that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had been in undisturbed possession for thirty or forty years previous to his dispossession by the defendant. The defendant alleged, but failed to prove, that the plaintiff had paid him rent as tenant-at-will of the premises. The lower Appellate Court, upon the finding that the plaintiff's possession was that of a licensee, modified the first Court's decree, which had allowed the claim in full. Held (by MAHMOOD, J.) with reference to s. 110 of the Evidence Act that, although in the first instance the burden of proving his title was on the plaintiff, it was shifted by his proving long undisturbed possession; that the defendant's failure to prove the alleged payment of rent went far to prove that the plaintiff's possession was adverse; and that the Court below, in acting upon the theory that such possession was that of a licensee, had wrongly set up for the defendant a defence which he had not set up for himself. 444. ———— Act XI of 1859, s. 37—Incumbrance, Annulment of—Burden of proof—Tenure held since permanent settlement.—In a suit for ejectment by a purchaser at a revenue sale, the defence was that the defendants held the land as a subordinate talukh, which had been in existence and in their possession and that of their predecessors since the time of the permanent settlement. It was found as a fact that the tenure was in existence in the year 1798-99. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed, and he now contended that the facts found could not protect the tenure in the absence of proof that the tenure was in existence at the date of the permanent settlement. Held that, although in the first instance the burden of proof is upon the defendants, the fact that defendants were in possession for such a length of time was sufficient to discharge the onus and establish that the tenure was protected. That in a case like this no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to when the burden of proof shifts from one side to the other, and that each case must be governed by its merits. 5. ———— Talukhdars—Title obtained by talukhdar under his sanad—Effect of confiscation of 1858 upon previous gift—Attempt to establish trust for claimants as to part of talukhdari estate—Claim to sub-proprietary right distinguished.—The sanad granting a talukhdar's estate confers primâ facie an absolute title upon the grantee. A gift of villages by a talukhdar to collateral relations, if effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1858, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukhdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages. Where a claim was based upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad-holding talukhdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his talukh, interests, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relations to claim,—Held that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukhdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and afterwards. Held also that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record; and held that, although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain on the same facts, that he is an under-proprietor, this claim was not one of them. 6. ———— Estate of a sanad-holding talukhdar—Lineal primogeniture by custom—Award of a body of talukhdar within s. 33 of Oudh Estates' Act—Withdrawal of a voluntary admission.—The title to a talukhdari estate devolving upon a single heir by a custom of lineal primogeniture was contested. The plaintiff claimed to succeed his deceased brother as talukhdar. The defendant, who was his paternal uncle, was in possession. Before the annexation of the province, the kabuliat had been taken in the name of the plaintiff's brother as talukhdar, who afterwards had been settled with, at both the summary settlements. By primogeniture, whether lineal or by proximity of degree (of which latter kind there was no evidence as to its being the customary one) he was the heir. To him a sanad had been granted, and the talukhdari had been entered in list II under the Act of 1869. On the other hand, it was urged that the above was consistent with the existence of a trust for the benefit of the titular talukhdar's uncles, of whom the defendant was the survivor, they having assented to the recognition of a nominal title in their nephew. Held that in intention as well as in form the grant of the talukhdari had been made absolutely to the sanad-holding talukhdar. In regard to the state of things before annexation, it might have been questioned whether or not the property was being held benami at that time. But after the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, had become law, the title shown by the plaintiff must prevail, and he must recover the estate, unless a trust for the defendant should have been established. There had been no consideration given, and there was nothing to create a trust. There had been no transfer, no estoppel, and no bar by time. In 1868 an award had been made by a body of talukhdars as arbitrators within s. 33 of the Act, between members of the family other than the present disputants. This as well as a wajib-ul-urz of one of the villages of the talukh was admissible as evidence of what was the custom in regard to its devolution. In 1879 the plaintiff had, on his brother's death, while admitting "the custom prevailing in my family of gaddinashini," joined in a petition that the defendant's name should be entered dakhil kharij in the revenue records. Held that there might be a withdrawal of any gratuitous admission, unless there should be some obligation not to withdraw it; that there was no such obligation here; and that there had been no proof of any title upon which the admission could rest. A gift of villages by a talukhdar to collateral relations, if effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1858, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukhdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages. Where a claim was based upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad-holding talukhdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his talukh, interests, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relations to claim,—Held that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukhdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and afterwards. Held also that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record; and held that, although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain on the same facts, that he is an under-proprietor, this claim was not one of them. 6. ——— Estate of a sanad-holding talukhdar—Lineal primogeniture by custom—Award of a body of talukhdar within s. 33 of Oudh Estates' Act—Withdrawal of a voluntary admission.—The title to a talukhdari estate devolving upon a single heir by a custom of linenal primogeniture was contested. The plaintiff claimed to succeed his deceased brother as talukhdar. The defendant, who was his paternal uncle, was in possession. Before the annexation of the province, the kabuliat had been taken in the name of the plaintiff's brother as talukhdar, who afterwards had been settled with, at both the summary settlements. By primogeniture, whether lineal or by proximity of degree (of which latter kind there was no evidence as to its being the customary one) he was the heir. To him a sanad had been granted, and the talukhdari had been entered in list II under the Act of 1869. On the other hand, it was urged that the above was consistent with the existence of a trust for the benefit of the titular talukhdar's uncles, of whom the defendant was the survivor, they having assented to the recognition of a nominal title in their nephew. Held that in intention as well as in form the grant of the talukhdari had been made absolutely to the sanad-holding talukhdar. In regard to the state of things before annexation, it might have been questioned whether or not the property was being held benami at that time. But after the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, had become law, the title shown by the plaintiff must prevail, and he must recover the estate, unless a trust for the defendant should have been established. There had been no consideration given, and there was nothing to create a trust. There had been no transfer, no estoppel, and no bar by time. In 1868 an award had been made by a body of talukhdars as arbitrators within s. 33 of the Act, between members of the family other than the present disputants. This as well as a wajib-ul-urz of one of the villages of the talukh was admissible as evidence of what was the custom in regard to its devolution. Will—Custom as to partition.—By the 8th paragraph of the Oudh proclamation of March 1858, it was declared that C L (at that time deceased), zamindar of Mourawan, and others, were thenceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the lands which they held when Oudh came under British rule, and which form part of the subject of these suits. Summary settlements of the said lands were subsequently made with G S (one of the sons of C L) by the Government between the 1st April 1858 and the 10th October 1859; a talukhdari sanad was granted to him before the passing of Act I of 1869; and he entered into a kabuliat for the same. His name was not entered in the second schedule annexed to the Act, but C L's was. By a document dated 7th February 1860, relating to property in the district of Oonao, and by other documents similar in effect relating to property in other districts, G S directed as follows: "I have been requested by Government to submit an application on the subject of primogeniture, with a view that the talukh may not be split into pieces as I would wish. Now the custom that has been followed in my family for generations past is this: that the eldest member of the family continues to be the head, while the others remain obedient to him; but every one possesses a share in the talukh. Under the custom of the family, the other brothers are at liberty to have their shares separated, should they wish it. The head has no power under the old custom to alienate the estate without consulting every sharer. I therefore wish that the old custom of maintaining the share of each shareholder be preserved, in opposition to the one in accordance with which one member of the family is allowed to succeed." In suits for partition amongst the descendants of C L and of his brother, who together constituted a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, all the property the subject of the suits having been found to be the joint property of the said family, it was contended on behalf of the appellants in the first appeal that all the estates included in the sanad to their father G S, and summary settlements, whether previously joint property of the family or not, became the separate self-acquired property of G S; that he was the sole malguzar thereof; and that he and his sons were the sole beneficial owners of it, and that he had no power to transfer it by will or by alienation inter vivos. Held that the sanad and summary settlements were a mere grant by the Government to one member of the family of property which belonged to the family jointly, and were not intended to enure to the sole benefit of the grantee, and did not affect the rights of the family. As regards such property granted to G S (if any) which was not previously part of the family estates, it was granted for services presumably rendered with the use of the joint family funds, and could not therefore be separate self-acquired property within the meaning of the Hindu law. Held also that, assuming any portion of such property to have been self-acquired by G S, he must, in consequence of Act I of 1869, be deemed to have acquired therein a permanent heritable and transferable right, and had power by will, or alienation inter vivos, to transfer the same. Held further that the document of the 7th February 1860 and other similar documents, so far as they related to the property in Oudh, amounted to a will within the definition of Act I of 1869, s. 2. Taken in conjunction with other documents, and having regard to the acts of different members of the family under it, the same amounted to evidence of an alienation inter vivos which in G S's lifetime transferred the property to the family to be held as joint family property. Ss. 16-19 of Act I of 1869 have no retrospective effect. HURPURSHAD v. SHEO DYAL. RAM SAHOY v. SHEO DYAL. BALMOKUND v. SHEO DYAL. RAM SAHOY v. BALMOKUND

The Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), which does require authorities to adopt to be registered, expressly excepts authorities conferred by will. The word "intestate," in s. 13, sub-s. 1, of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, means intestate as to the talukhdari estate; and the use of the word does not exclude from the exception in that sub-section a son adopted under an authority conferred by a talukhdar's unregistered will. A talukhdar by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire riasat. This power having been exercised, the following objections to the adoption were disallowed: first, one founded on the will not having been registered, and, consequently, the authority not having been registered; secondly, one founded on the erroneous argument that the adopted son was not within the class excepted in s. 13, sub-s. 1, and therefore could not take under an unregistered will. 3.—— Right of tenant under talukhdari settlement—Tenancy-at-will—Right of resumption—Absence of under-proprietary right.—At the confiscation and restoration of Oudh lands in 1858, it was intended to settle and restore under regulation to the talukhdars, with certain exceptions, the talukhdars' rights, and also to protect as far as was necessary, by sub-settlement or otherwise, the existing rights of the occupiers; but there is nothing to show any intention to advance beyond what the rights were at the time. Where the relation of talukhdar and tenant at a rent of land within a talukh has been shown to have existed at that date, and since the tenant cannot defeat the talukhdar's right of resumption on due notice, notwithstanding a lengthened duration of tenancy, he is entitled to an under-proprietary right, either on the ground that, by reason of this state of things having brought him within the meaning of paragraph 2 of the schedule to Act XXVI of 1866, or on the ground that time and undisturbed enjoyment have ripened his holding into a species of ownership. The issues between the parties raising only the question of some form of proprietary right, still, if the tenant had shown any right whatever to remain undisturbed by the talukhdar, such right would have been considered on this appeal and would have received effect. The allegation of a grant in perpetuity in 1826 at a rent to be varied according to the amount of revenue payable by the talukhdar, not having been proved, but the existence and origin of a tenancy having been shown at a rent, paid down to the commencement of the suit,—Held that length of enjoyment, coupled with such payment of rent, could give no greater force to the tenant's right than it originally possessed. 9. ——— Forest lands—Acts of ownership—Property in the soil—Construction of istemrari sanad of 1803 as to lands granted—Evidence of possession—Questions of fact—Proof of zamindari title.—A zamindar claimed from the Government the proprietary possession of a tract of hill and forest, in virtue of an istemrar sanad of the year 1803, conferring upon the grantee, his heirs and successors a permanent property in the zamindari as then possessed. To the sanad, which was aptly worded to include the subject of this claim, the acts of the zamindar had been ascribed. But it did not contain any description of the lands which it was intended to carry, a marginal note only specifying three villages then comprising the zamindari. The plaintiff having proved that he and his ancestors had cut wood, pastured cattle, and gathered forest produce in certain forests for fifty years, the lower Court held that such acts of enjoyment were only evidence of an easement and not of adverse possession. Held by the High Court that these acts as they had been done under the belief and assertion that the said tracts formed portion of the zamindari, and that the plaintiff and his ancestors were owners of the said tracts, were evidence of adverse possession. In principle, an act done is one of evidence of an easement or adverse according as the person doing it asserts general ownership or a particular right in another's property. The enjoyment of any right of ownership over the soil is primâ facie proof of ownership of the soil. Where, therefore, the lower Court found such an enjoyment of a forest as proved title to the profits thereof, and such enjoyment was consistent with an otherwise ownership of the soil. Held that the Court was bound to find a title to the soil established. Held by the Privy Council on appeal (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the grant was not confined to the villages enumerated, and to an area in their immediate vicinity, but that the whole tract of hill and forest was claimable as within the limits, by direct evidence or reasonable inference, that it was in the possession of the zamindar when he obtained a permanent title from the Government. As to part of the tract, the zamindar's acts of possession, such as grazing cattle, cutting timber, and collecting forest produce, had been exclusive of the exercise of such rights by any other persons; but as to another part of the tract, his acts of that character had been concurrent with a similar user of hill and forest by raiyats of neighbouring villages, not part of the zamindari and belonging to the Government. Held, as to both parts, that the acts of possession, which had been found by both the Courts below to have been done by the zamindar, did not fall short of proving his proprietary possession, and that the user by the villagers, not having taken place in the assertion of conflicting proprietary right, and whether or not they were sufficient to establish rights of easement, were neither in amount nor quality sufficient to displace the zamindar's proprietary title. The decision of the first Court that the exercise of the abovementioned rights by the zamindar was evidence only of the right on his part to use the land of another for the purposes indicated, had been rightly reversed by the High Court. Where the proprietary right in a tract of land had been constantly asserted, all questions between the disputants as to the amount of the use of the tract by the claimant, and as to the sufficiency of such use to establish his possession over the whole extent, were held to be questions of fact. Held, in the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council, who affirmed the judgment of the High Court: A Court, when dealing with the disposition of her property by a parda woman, ought to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her, and that she knew what she was doing; especially in a case where, without legal assistance, for no consideration, and without any equivalent, she has executed a document, written in a language she does not understand, which deprives her of all her property. The deed was also executed in the absence of the person who was at that time the executant's chief adviser and the manager of her property Lastly, it appeared that, as soon as the executant came to know what the true nature of the deed was, and that proceedings had been initiated in the Revenue Department for mutation of names, she took immediate measures to show her dissent from the provisions of the deed and her disapproval of what had been done thereunder

There was nothing to show that the ladies had ever benefited in any way from the money advanced under the bond. Held that, even if the ladies behind the parda were in fact the two defendants, this evidence would not be enough to bind them, and that it was for the plaintiff, who sought to bring their property to sale on the strength of a transaction with them, to show that they were free agents in the matter, and, having a clear knowledge of what they were doing, accorded their consent to it. Buzloor Raheem v. *Shumsoonnissa Begum, 11 Moore's I. 20. ——— Sale of villages by a wife to her husband—Proof of execution of deed of sale.—The purchase-money had not been paid on what purported to be a deed of sale of villages by a Mahomedan wife to her husband for a price which, however, the deed acknowledged to have been paid. After her death, two of her relations, disputing the due execution of the sale-deed, sued the husband, who had obtained possession, claiming in the alternative either that they should obtain their shares in the property of the deceased, or, if the sale of the villages should be maintained, that they should receive their proportion of the price as due to the estate left by her. The two Courts below concurred in finding that the wife, a pardanashin, was capable of managing her own affairs, and that she had not received the price. The first Court inferred from the state of things that the wife had in a manner made a gift of the villages to the husband. The High Court reversed that judgment, and decided that, with regard to the probability of influence on the part of the husband, the absence of any independent advice for the wife and other circumstances, the transaction was without effect. The Judicial Committee found that there not being a case of undue influence exercised, either made by the plaint or raised by the issues, they found no evidence that the price stated was inadequate, or the sale an improvident one, or that the husband had been released from having to pay the price. From the findings on the evidence the pre-emption was that the wife intended to pass the property for some purpose, and that the suggestion of a gift being excluded, the deed operated as a sale according to what it purported to be. They did not throw any doubt on the sound doctrine, laid down in numerous cases, as to the obligations upon persons taking benefits from pardanashin ladies. To the one surviving plaintiff was awarded a moiety of the price payable by the husband, who himself inherited the balance. MUHAMMAD IKRAM-UD-DIN v. NAJIBAN I. L. R., 20 All., 447

10. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 337, 339—Accomplice—Tender of pardon, Effect of—Subsequent trial of accomplice for connected offences.—A prisoner charged before a Magistrate at Benares with offences punishable under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code, made a confession to the Magistrate in respect of those offences. He was then sent in custody to Calcutta, and was there, together with other persons, charged before a Magistrate with offences punishable under ss. 467, 473, and 475. The conduct to which these charges related was closely connected and mixed up with that to which the charges first-mentioned had reference. Under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate at Calcutta tendered a pardon to the prisoner upon the condition specified in that section, and the prisoner accepted the pardon, and gave evidence for the prosecution. The Magistrate held that this evidence was not sufficiently corroborated, and accordingly discharged all the accused, but the pardon was not withdrawn, and there was nothing to show that the Magistrate was dissatisfied with the prisoner's statements or considered that he had not complied with the conditions on which the pardon was tendered. Subsequently the prisoner was committed by the Magistrate of Benares for trial before the Court of Session upon the charges under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code. He pleaded not guilty, but did not in terms plead the pardon as a bar to the trial, though he made some reference to the subject; and the Sessions Judge, having made a brief inquiry as to the proceedings at Calcutta, came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient proof of any conditional pardon, and convicted and sentenced the accused. Held that, by the terms of the conditional pardon granted to the accused by the Calcutta Magistrate, the conditions of which were satisfied as was shown by its never having been withdrawn, the accused was protected from trial at Benares in respect of the offences under ss. 471, 472, and 474, and was not liable to be proceeded against in respect of them, and that the trial and conviction were therefore illegal Although s 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not in terms cover a case where a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry for committal against several persons tenders a conditional pardon to one of them examines him as a witness and subsequently discharges all the accused for want of a primâ facie case against them, the words "every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case" mean that for all purposes (subject to failure to satisfy the conditions of the pardon as provided for by s 339) such a person ceases to be triable for the offence or offences under inquiry or (with reference to s 339) for "any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter" while making "a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offences" directly under inquiry The words last quoted refer to the importance when a pardon is tendered of encouraging the approver to give the fullest details so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration The question of how far the pardon protects him and what portion of it should not protect him ought not to be treated in a narrow spirit QUEEN EMPRESS v GANGA CHARAN I L R, 11 All., 79 parties concerned, where such intentions are clearly expressed, and are not repugnant to any general principle of English law. The Courts will not, in such a case, apply rules of English law which, though well established and binding on English Courts, are yet so special in their nature and origin as to be inapplicable to the different circumstances of this country. The members of a Parsi family, the heirs of one Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, entered into an agreement with one another, bearing date the 24th May 1851, by which they agreed that the remaining income, after paying the deceased's debts, of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, called the Poway estate—an estate situated in the Island of Salsette, and therefore in the mofussil of the Presidency of Bombay—should be apportioned "to the heirs mentioned in cl. 7 (of the agreement)"—i.e., among the various heirs of Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, the parties to the agreement—"but, after their death, their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." It was contended that, Parsis being subject to English law, these words conferred an absolute estate in their respective shares upon the various parties to the agreement under the rule in Shelley's case. Held per BAYLEY, J., that the plain intention of the parties to the agreement, appearing on the face of the agreement, was that they themselves should take only a life-estate to the extent of their respective shares in the remaining income of the Poway estate; and that the rule in Shelley's case should not be applied so as to defeat that plain intention. Held on appeal (affirming the order of BAYLEY, J.) that, even assuming English law to be applicable, the English law so to be applied could not include the rule in Shelley's case, which is a law of property or tenure based on feudal considerations, and unsuited to the circumstances of India; that the rule of construction to be applied to the agreement must in any case be to give effect to the intention of the parties according to the plain meaning of the language; and that to construe the agreement as giving more than a life-interest to the parties thereto would be to defeat their obvious intention. On appeal,—Held that the settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory was in law a valid settlement and not void as creating a perpetuity. In the absence of words in the context showing that they were intended to take less, the respective heirs and children of the signatories took an absolute estate. was living and by whom he had been adopted. Nineteen years afterwards the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration that the pretended marriage was null and void, and did not create the status of husband and wife between the plaintiff and defendant The defendant resisted the suit, and claimed to be the lawful wife of the plaintiff The plaintiff and defendant never lived together as man and wife, nor was the marriage ever consummated. Held that under the circumstances the formal consent of the uncle and the tacit consent of the father were enough to satisfy the requirements of s 3 of Act XV of 1865 which requires the previous consent of the father or guardian to the marriage Held further that, such a suit not being in the category of suits relegated to a special Court by Act XV of 1865, the jurisdiction to try it remained in the High Court, to which it had been given by s 12 of the Letters Patent Held also that the law to be applied was the English law (subject, however, to any well-established usage), that by the English law such a marriage would be an inchoate and imperfect marriage capable of repudiation by either party after arriving at years of discretion, but capable also of being made a valid and binding marriage by the consent of the parties thereto after they had arrived at such age. Held further that the circumstances of the case showed that there had been such acquiescence in, and acceptance of, the marriage by the plaintiff after arriving at years of discretion as to render the marriage valid and binding on him, and incapable of subsequent repudiation. Consummation is the best proof of consent to a marriage, but is not the only proof. And semble that, although the practice of infant marriages is one which finds no warrant in their own religious system, the Parsis in Western India have in the course of centuries so generally adopted such practice from their Hindu neighbours as to give such marriages amongst themselves all the validity they possess amongst Hindus, making them independent of any question of subsequent consent or non-consent by the parties thereto. 11. ———————— Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 5—"Widower," Meaning of word—A widower on second marriage is still a widower relatively to deceased wife.—In s. 5 of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the word "widower" means a widower relatively to the deceased wife only, and without consideration of the fact or possibility of the widower re-marrying. D, a Parsi, died intestate on the 19th September 1885, leaving a widow (the defendant) and two daughters and the heirs of a pre-deceased daughter J him surviving. J had been the wife of the plaintiff, and had died thirty-four years before the date of this suit, leaving, as her heirs, her husband (the plaintiff) and one daughter, who was still living. After J's death, the plaintiff married again, and his second wife was living at the date of this suit. Letters of administration to D's estate were granted to his widow, the defendant. The plaintiff claimed a share in D's estate, contending that he was the widower of J, one of the daughters of the intestate, and entitled as such under s. 5 of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act (XXI of 1865). Held that he was the widower of J within the meaning of the section, and as such was entitled to a share in D's estate. She had never lived with the defendant as his wife. The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding, being of opinion that the custom of infant marriage among the Parsis was well established and recognized. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that at all events in 1869, when the marriage took place, the custom was common and recognized as binding. On second appeal the High Court concurred with the opinion expressed in Peshotam v. Meherbai, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 302, that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy, but the lower Courts having found a custom had grown up among Parsis in India validating such marriages, and that the custom was in force in 1869, did not consider it open on second appeal to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence established the existence of such a custom. Held that a Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void is "acting in the matter of marriage," and therefore the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), which makes the age of eighteen the age of majority, does not apply to a question of limitation with regard to such suit. The age of majority in such a case is that prescribed by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), viz., twenty-one years. Held also that art. 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable to the above suit, and that the plaintiff having, for the purpose of bringing the suit, attained her majority at twenty-one, the suit was not barred. Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted, the matter being left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular, just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves it to be dealt with by the common law of England. BAI SHIRINBAI v. KHARSHEDJI NASARVANJI MASALAVALA

Two of her brothers and one sister had left children. Some of these children had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Two of this last mentioned class had also predeceased her, leaving children (great-grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Held that Jerbai's property should, in the first instance, be divided into three shares, i.e., one for each of the two predeceased brothers who left children, and one for the predeceased sister who left a child. Each brother's share to be two-fifths and the sister's one-fifth. These shares to be sub-divided among the descendants of the two brothers and the sister, respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor, and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity. In art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas, if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant, although he had carried the R2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the plaintiff ought to have made the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit. Held that the other parties to the agreement were not necessary parties to the suit. The accounts had been made up and were admittedly correct, and they showed that the defendant had nothing to receive from any of the parties to the agreement, but that he was indebted in a definite sum to the plaintiff. He left a widow, B, and a minor son, M. At his death he made a will bequeathing his property to his son, and appointing certain executors to manage the property during the son's minority. The son died in 1877, leaving a minor widow, N. In 1879 one of the executors obtained probate of L's will from the High Court. In 1884 a suit was filed, on behalf of the minor N, against her mother-in-law, B, to recover possession of the property covered by the will of L. One of the defences to the suit was that the property in dispute had vested in the executor, who had obtained probate of the will, and that, as the defendant held the estate under the executor, the suit was not maintainable without impleading the executor. Held that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. S. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) did not apply so far as it related to property outside Bombay. The property in dispute was situated in the Surat district. It was joint ancestral property. On the father's death, it vested in the son by survivorship, and on the son's death, it vested in the son's widow, the plaintiff in the present suit. Under the provisions, therefore, of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4 (if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2), the estate could not vest in the executor, as it had passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. There was however, only an erroneous debit in the Collectorate books against the estate, in excess of the revenue actually assessed upon it, chargeable against it, and due from it. In a suit brought to set aside the sale in the Courts below, the Government had been made co-defendants, but were not respondents on this appeal, and the objection was taken on the argument of this appeal and by previous petition that they should be made parties, respondents. Held that it was a mistaken view that a decree annulling the sale in this suit would be res judicata in any future question or proceeding, as between the Government and the unsuccessful purchaser. 85. ——— Contract made by member of joint family in individual capacity—Right to sue alone.—The firm of S & Co., the partners of which were W S and F E, took a contract from Government on 12th November 1877 to construct a barrel-house at the Gunpowder Manufactory at Kirkee; and on the 28th November 1877 the plaintiff agreed to advance money "up to R15,000" for the purpose of enabling the firm to carry out the contract. Under the agreement, the plaintiff was to receive all sums to become due from the Government on the contractors' bills, and to pay the balance to the firm after repaying himself all advances with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power-of-attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all such sums to become due to the firm under the contract, which power-of-attorney was deposited by plaintiff in the office of the Executive Engineer at Poona. In March or April 1878 W S left for England, up to which time R34,900 had been advanced by the plaintiff, and a balance of R14,942-5-10 still remained due to him after giving credit for the sums received on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. On 24th July 1878 the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement with F E similar to the former one, to make further advances to the firm up to R16,000 in addition to R15,000 on the same terms as those mentioned in the previous agreement; and by means of these advances the contract was completed at the end of 1879. In 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against W S and attached the right, title, and interest of W S in a sum of R5,034-11-9 in the hands of the Executive Engineer, which was then due to the firm on the contract. The plaintiff, who alleged that R13,700-1-11 were due to him from the firm, applied to have the attachment removed, which application was refused on 30th September 1879, and the sum attached was paid to the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him R5,034-11-9. Held that, although the plaintiff might be a member of an undivided Hindu family, still, as the contract was entered into with the plaintiff in his individual capacity, and as there was nothing on the face of the contract to show that the plaintiff was acting on behalf of the family, the plaintiff was entitled to sue alone. There must be some consentient act to that effect on the part of the infant and his partners. Even, therefore, where parties are governed by the Mitakshara law, an infant need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. The defendant objected that the separated uncle and cousins of the plaintiff should be made co-plaintiffs in the suit. These relations of the plaintiff were not joint members of the plaintiff's family at the time of the mortgage, nor did they claim any interest in the equity of redemption. Held that the plaintiff's uncle and cousins were not necessary parties. If the defendant had shown that, at the date of the mortgage, the plaintiff's father and uncles were undivided, it might have been presumed that the mortgage was on their behalf as well as on his own. But this the defendant had failed to do. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters, only one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time-barred. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim. The Assistant Judge on appeal held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters were necessary parties, but that it was too late to join them, the suit with regard to them having become barred by limitation. He therefore dismissed the suit. On second appeal,—Held by the High Court that all persons interested in a property, which it is sought to redeem or recover on payment of a charge, are necessary parties, as otherwise the possessor may be exposed to many suits upon the same cause of action. Held also that the plaintiff's brother and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. 104. ———————— Suit for redemption or recovery of property on payment of a charge—Possession after redemption by one of several mortgagors—Adverse possession—Limitation.—The plaintiff sought to recover his father's share in two portions of family property, one of which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendant No. 1 jointly; the other had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father jointly with the father of defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters, only one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time-barred. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim. The Assistant Judge on appeal held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters were necessary parties, but that it was too late to join them, the suit with regard to them having become barred by limitation. He therefore dismissed the suit. On second appeal,—Held by the High Court that all persons interested in a property, which it is sought to redeem or recover on payment of a charge, are necessary parties, as otherwise the possessor may be exposed to many suits upon the same cause of action. Held also that the plaintiff's brother and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 425

147. ——————— Suit for partition and to set aside order disallowing objection to attachment—Purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share.—In a partition suit all persons interested in the property to be divided must be brought before the Court. A purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share in the joint property is a proper, and even necessary, party to a suit for partition. A, B, and C were members of a joint Hindu family. In execution of a decree against B, a portion of the family property was attached. Thereupon A intervened and objected to the attachment so far as his own share was concerned. The objection was disallowed, and the property was brought to sale and purchased by D. A then filed a suit (1) to set aside the order in the miscellaneous proceedings disallowing his objection to the attachment; and (2) for a partition of the whole family property. In this suit he impleaded not only his co-sharers B and C, but also D, the auction-purchaser, and E, a mortgagee of B's share in the joint property. The Subordinate Judge, holding that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties as well as of causes of action, returned the plaint for amendment by striking out the prayer for partition. On appeal, this order was confirmed by the District Judge. On A's application to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure,—Held that the suit was not bad either for misjoinder of parties or for misjoinder of causes of action. Treating the suit as one for partition, the auction purchaser D and the mortgagee E were proper, and even necessary, parties. If A established his right to partition, he would be entitled to have the order in the miscellaneous proceedings set aside in the same suit. SADU BIN RAGHU v. RAM BIN GOVIND

Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 148—Landholder and tenant—Suit for rent where the right to receive it is disputed—Third person who has received rent made party—Jurisdiction of Rent Court to pass decree for rent against such party—Question of title.*—In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent, the defendants pleaded that they had paid the rent to a co-sharer of the plaintiff. The co-sharer made a deposition, in which he alleged that he was entitled to the rent not only as a co sharer, but also as the appointed agent of the plaintiff. The Court thereupon made him a party to the suit under s. 148 of the Rent Act, and passed a joint decree against him and the tenants for rent. Held that the Court was justified in making him a party under s. 148 of the Rent Act, but was not competent to pass a decree for rent against him. A party, who is brought in under s. 148 of the Rent Act, cannot be made subject to the decree for rent so as to allow execution to be taken out against him, whether his bonâ fide receipt and enjoyment of the rent is proved or not. The only person against whom such a decree can be passed is the tenant. Madho Prasad v. Ambar, I. L. R., 5 All., 503, referred to. Per EDGE, C.J.—Semble—That the intention of the Legislature in allowing a third person who claims under s. 148 of the Rent Act to be made a party to the suit may possibly have been that, by bringing him in, he may be bound by a declaration in the suit that he had, in fact, received the rent, so as to prevent him in the civil suit from denying the fact that he had received it. In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent in which a third person alleged to have received such rent is made a party under s. 148 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), the question of title to receive the rent cannot be determined between the plaintiff and such person, but can only be litigated and determined in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court. The only question between the plaintiff and the person so made a party which can be determined in the Rent Court under s. 148 is the actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent. 1883 the shevaks issued rules prohibiting people from entering the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir, which were particularly sacred chambers in the temple, except on payment of certain fees Every visitor was required to purchase a ticket of admission to the interior parts of the temple. The plaintiffs thereupon sued for a declaration of their right of free access to the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir at all times and on all occasions when the temple was open for purposes of public worship They alleged that the new rules framed by the shevaks constituted an infringement of their immemorial rights of going into the said mandirs without any let or hindrance, of worshipping the idol there for themselves and their patrons and of receiving whatever their patrons gave them They therefore sought for a perpetual injunction restraining the shevaks from interfering with their rights The plaintiffs were 208 in number Thirteen of them obtained leave to bring the suit on behalf of themselves and the rest under s 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) The defendants contended inter alia) that the plaintiffs had each a separate cause of action, that they had no right to sue jointly, that they were not entitled to a declaratory decree under s 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and that the plaintiffs, never having been obstructed in the exercise of their rights, had no cause of action Held that the suit was rightly constituted under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure The rules made by the shevaks in 1883 interfered with the immemorial rights of the gors, and gave a common cause of action to all the plaintiffs They were therefore entitled to sue jointly Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaratory decree under s 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), as their title to free access with their patrons to the sacred shrines and to receive presents from their patrons unfettered by the rules of 1883 was denied by those rules Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to further relief by way of perpetual injunction under s 54 of 1877, as the defendants had threatened to invade their enjoyment of property, and the invasion was such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief Held also that the shevaks had no authority to issue the rules of the 12th October 1883 or to levy fees from worshippers in respect of any public religious services held in the temple KALIDAS JIVRAM v GOR PARJARAM HIRJI

The three brothers at the hearing expressed their willingness that A should sue alone. Held that such assent did not obviate the necessity of joining all the proper parties as co-plaintiffs, and that the suit therefore, as framed, would not lie. Held further that A would have been in no better position had he joined his three brothers as co-plaintiffs after the suit was, as regards them, time-barred; since such a suit would have been virtually a suit by himself alone and therefore bad. *Boidonath Bag v. No time was fixed for payment of the money, so that it became payable on the date of the hathchitta. The suit was instituted on the 19th July 1880, and came on for hearing on the 26th July, when an objection was taken that all the parties who ought to sue were not on the record. On the application of the original plaintiffs, the names of the father and the third son were then added, and the plaintiffs were described as surviving partners of the deceased son. At the time the additional plaintiffs were made parties, the suit was, as regards them, barred by limitation. Held that the additional plaintiffs were rightly made parties to the suit, notwithstanding that the suit was, as far as they were concerned, barred. In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant, if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs; and if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. Held that, inasmuch as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs, and the added plaintiffs were barred by s. 22 of Act XV of 1877, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred. Boydonath Bag v. Grish Chunder Roy, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 26, dissented from. There is no equity, but often much injustice, in allowing one joint contractor out of many to sue a defendant, notwithstanding an objection duly made by the latter; and the Court has no right to allow one contractor to recover under such circumstances, though he may, no doubt, afterwards adjust the sum which he recovers with his co-contractors. 281. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 73, 350—Act XXVII of 1860, s. 4—Certificate of administration—Suit by co-heir against holder of certificate.—In a suit against a co-heir, who had obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, for an account of the estate of the deceased proprietor, a third party was added as a defendant under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859, "it appearing from the accounts put in that a large portion of the assets had been disposed of by him as agent" of the holder of the certificate. On appeal,—Held that a co-heir is entitled to follow property of the deceased into the hands of any person who has misappropriated it, and such right is not taken away by the certificate. Therefore, any person who, with the consent of the holder of the certificate, has improperly possessed himself of property belonging to the deceased, and misappropriated it, may be joined as a co-defendant. The third party was rightly so joined in this case. NGA THA YA v. MI KHAN MHAW

This decree was confirmed on appeal, and K made liable for the costs of those defendants in respect of whom his claim had been dismissed. Meantime B, an old judgment-creditor of K's father, took out execution against R, and applied for sale of K's rights in the estate, which were accordingly sold, the purchaser being K himself. Subsequently one of M's daughters, a successful defendant in the suit brought by K, took out execution of her decree for costs, and put up K's rights for sale. The sale was opposed, under s. 246, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, by R, a son of B, whose claim was summarily rejected, and K's rights were bought by one A. R then brought a suit within one year to set aside the sale, and to have his own title declared. The suit was against the purchaser and against the representatives of the zur-i-peshgidars; but on the petition of L, one of M's heirs, her name was added to the list of defendants. The first Court gave R a decree, but the lower Appellate Court found that his claim was barred by limitation against L, on the ground of non-possession within twelve years, and in respect of the zur-i-peshgidar because K's decree had lapsed by delay in execution. Held that L was interested in the result of the suit, and the lower Courts committed no error in law in admitting her to be a defendant under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1859. On an appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the Appellate Court directed the defendants exonerated by the first Court to be added as respondents, set aside the decree against the appealing defendant, and passed a decree against the defendants who were added as respondents, as representatives of one S, and ordered the amount so decreed to be recovered from the estate of her (S's) husband. On appeal to the High Court by the defendants, who were thus made liable, on the ground that they were wrongly made parties and no decrees could be passed against them,

328. ———— Persons interested in the result of the appeal—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 559.—In a suit for possession of land the Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit in part against the defendants. Some of the defendants appealed to the High Court without making the other defendats party-respondents. The plaintiffs preferred a cross-objection under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The non-appealing defendants where added as respondents by an order of the High Court to the effect that they might be made parties without prejudice to any objection that might be urged on their behalf at the hearing of the appeal. The non-appealing defendants at the hearing of the appeal contended that they were wrongly made parties. Held that the non-appealing defendants were persons who were interested in the result of the appeal, within the meaning of s. 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore they were rightly made parties. On receipt of the agreement, the Subordinate Judge issued notices to the parties to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and was, on the day of hearing, informed that the agreement could not be filed owing to plaintiff's death. The agreement was then returned to the conciliator, who entered therein the name of the deceased plaintiff's heir and forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge. A question having thereupon arisen as to whether the conciliator could enter on the record the name of the heir of the deceased plaintiff, —Held that, although there is no provision in the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect, yet when a Subordinate Judge is seized of a conciliation agreement, there is a proceeding before him under the Act. In the meantime, in a suit instituted by the beneficiaries against the trustees, a decree had been passed on the 5th April 1898, declaring that the beneficiaries were entitled to possession of the trust estate from the 18th April and directing the trustees to make over possession to them. This decree further directed that proper conveyances should be executed by the trustees when required. On the 5th July 1898, the beneficiaries applied for substitution of their names in the place of the trustees in the appeal filed on the 18th April. Held that, though the trustees were directed to execute proper conveyances when required, yet, having regard to the direction as to delivery of possession, the decree of the 5th April must be taken to have divested the property out of the trustees and vested it in the beneficiaries. The trustees therefore had not any estate left in them on the 18th April sufficient to justify their being appellants. in s. 368 may well be intended for the case in which the death, and death only, of the defendant constitutes the change of circumstances for which it was thought necessary to provide, but where there has been not only the death of the respondent, but an alleged prior conveyance to him of the property awarded by the decree appealed against, there is a fact in addition to the fact contemplated by s 368, and the rule in s 372, being alone sufficiently inclusive, must apply. An appellant may determine who shall be respondent, but not that any particular person shall not be a respondent The choice of respondents made by the appellant may be defective through ignorance or fraud and the real representative of the decree-holder cannot justly be refused an opportunity of maintaining the decision which it is sought to upset RAJARAM BHAGVAT v JIBAI I L R., 9 Bom, 151

s. 365 to apply to such a case, the Court had no power to make K a respondent jointly with H, but should have taken one or the other of the courses specified in s. 367, so as to determine who was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff; and that the course adopted by the Court was an exceedingly inconvenient one, which ought not to have been taken, even if the Court had power under the Code to take it. The "questions involved in the suit," referred to in the second paragraph of s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, are questions between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not questions which may arise between co-defendants or co-plaintiffs inter se. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff died childless, and, on her application, his widow was substituted for him as respondent. Subsequently the defendants-appellants applied to the High Court to have the deceased's father brought upon the record as respondent, alleging that he, and not the widow, was the deceased's legal representative and solely entitled to be placed on the record as such. The father made no objection to the proposed substitution. It was common ground that either the father alone or the widow alone was the deceased plaintiff-respondent's true legal representative. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that, having regard to the words "as nearly as may be" and "as far as may be" in s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 365, 366, and 367 might be applied, at all events analogically, to the case, so as to enable the real legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent to be ascertained and brought upon the record; that the latter portion of s. 582 did not limit the earlier words of the section so as to make s. 368 the only provision applicable to the case; that a Court of record must have an inherent power to ascertain whether or not it has before it the proper parties to an appeal if the question be substantially raised; and that therefore the Court could and should, either before or at the hearing of the appeal, ascertain and determine, for the purposes of the prosecution of the appeal, the preliminary question whether the father or the widow was the legal representative of the deceased, and should act accordingly. Held also by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that s. 32 of the Code did not apply to the case, and that, if it did apply, it would be the duty of the Court to decide whether the father or the widow was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent. Held by MAHMOOD, J., contra, that the effect of s. 582 read with s. 587 was to place the defendants-appellants in the position of plaintiffs and the deceased respondent in that of a defendant for the purposes of array of parties; that consequently the provisions of ss. 363, 364, 365, 366, and 367 had no application; that, applying s. 368, the Court was bound to implead the person named by the defendants-appellants as a respondent to the appeal; that, applying s. 32, the widow occupied a position which gave her a sufficient primâ facie status to be impleaded as respondent; and that, as there existed no authority in the Court allowing the Court to hold an enquiry whether the father or the widow was the true legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent, the Court should bring both upon the record as respondents and proceed to decide the appeal after hearing both. Narain Dass v. *Lajja Ram, I. 9. ———————— Beng. Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 30—Power of Collector—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—It is not correct to say that, under s. 30 of Regulation XIX of 1814, the Collector is not at liberty to make any partition where the owners have already partitioned the lands amongst themselves. The true meaning of the section is that the Collector must be guided by the nature of the estate in applying the rules contained in the preceding sections of the Regulation; and that, where estates are not held in common tenancy, only a portion of those rules will apply. If the parties have divided the lands without agreeing as to the shares of the Government revenue to be paid by them, respectively, all the Collector has to do, when a partition has been applied for, is to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the interest of each shareholder. If they have divided the lands and arranged amongst themselves as to the portion of the Government revenue which each is to pay, it is open to the Collector to accept or reject that arrangement. This share was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1873, and purchased by the plaintiff, who subsequently applied to the Collector for partition under the Batwarra Act. The Collector refused to partition, upon the ground that the Act was not applicable to the partition of a mouzah held jointly by the proprietors of two separate estates. The plaintiff then brought the present suit, to which he made the Collector a party, to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to have his share separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts. Held that, so far as the plaintiff on the one hand and the owners of the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share on the other were concerned, the mouzah could be partitioned, but that such partition would not be binding upon the Government unless by consent. In 1874 the shares of K and P were sold in execution of decrees against them, and in 1877 the remaining shares were sold, and finally the house became the property of the plaintiff and one A in equal moieties. The plaintiff sued A for partition and obtained a decree, but pending execution A conveyed his moiety back again to R and V. The brothers had continued to occupy the house notwithstanding the changes in ownership. V now applied under s. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) to be allowed to buy the plaintiff's moiety. Held that he was not entitled to the advantage given by the section. It is ownership, not occupation, that gives the right. After the sales in 1877, the house no longer belonged to an undivided family. V and his brothers were then either tenants in the house or trespassers. The question was whether the dwelling-house at the time the shares therein, which had not been sold to A, were transferred to the plaintiff belonged to an undivided family. When the plaintiff purchased his moiety, he and A became the owners in common of the house, and as between them s. 4 of the Partition Act had no operation. The subsequent purchase of A's interest by R and V did not confer upon them any rights which A did not possess. Where such a partition is effected under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814 before the mortgagees have completed their title by foreclosure and the consequential decree for possession, the mortgagees of the undivided share of one co-sharer who has no priority of contract with the other co-sharers would have no recourse against the lands allotted to such co-sharers, but must pursue their remedy against the lands allotted to the mortgagor, and, as against him, would have a charge on the whole of such lands. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quære—Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in the case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit and not by a consent of parties. During the pendency of the partition suit, the defendants, the two remaining co-sharers, granted a lease of a particular plot of land included in the undivided estate to the present defendant. By the decree for partition the plot of land under the lease was allotted to the plaintiff who brought the present suit to recover possession of the piece of land on the ground that he was not bound by the lease. Held that s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to cases where the shares of the parties and their rights to those shares are not disputed. 113. ———— Proprietary right in sir land.—When an estate in which the proprietors have sír land is partitioned, such partition among the co-sharers is no way affected by any cultivating rights which may be possessed by cultivators not co-sharers in the estate; but it is also a well-understood effect and consequence of partition that co-sharers retain no right of occupancy in respect of any sír land which may have passed under the partition into the share of other co-sharers, as a sír-hold proprietor has no cultivating right distinct from, and independent of, his proprietary character. When, therefore, by partition he loses his proprietary title to any particular land, any cultivating right which he had in virtue of his proprietary character necessarily ceases. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 113.*—Upon an application made under s. 108 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) for partition of a share in a mehal, no question of title or proprietary right of the nature contemplated by s. 113 was raised, nor any serious objection made by any of the co-sharers, and the Assistant Collector recorded a proceeding setting forth the rules which were to govern the partition, and this proceeding was confirmed by the Collector under s. 138. An Amin was ordered to carry out the partition, and, in taking steps to do so, stated the principle upon which he proposed to distribute the common land. An objection was then for the first time raised by two of the co-sharers in the Court of the Assistant Collector to the inclusion of a particular piece of land in the partition, on the ground that it appertained exclusively to their share. This objection was disallowed by the Assistant Collector, and, on appeal, by the District Judge. Held that, at the stage of the proceedings when objections were taken, it was too late to determine questions of title under s. 113 of the Act ; that accordingly the Assistant Collector could not be said to have done so ; that the objections could therefore only be regarded in the light of objections to the mode in which it was proposed to make the partition, and that consequently there was no appeal from the order of the Assistant Collector to the District Judge or from the District Judge to the High Court. 1. WHAT CONSTITUTES PARTNERSHIP.

1. ——— Participation in profits—Application of English law.—M M & Co., merchants in London, carrying on business with W N W & Co., merchants in Calcutta, sought to make the defendant liable as a partner in the latter firm, under a particular memorandum of agreement between the members of the firm of W N W & Co. and the defendant. Held that such agreement did not constitute the Rajah a partner in or with the said firm. Participation in profits does not constitute a partnership. The question is, not whether the person sought to be made liable participated in the profits, but whether the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf. There is no rule of law which imposes partnership liability upon a man who advances to others money for the purpose of carrying on their business, and in return secures to himself a share of the profits which may arise from the employment in the business of the money so advanced by him. PRATAB CHUNDRA SINGH v. MOLLOW, MARCH & CO.

On appeal to the Privy Council,—Held, although a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such participation alone, it may, as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be inferred, yet whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. To constitute a partnership, the parties must have agreed to carry on business and to share profits in some way in common; but where a contract is entered into between partners and a third person for the protection of that person as a creditor, whereby it is agreed that he shall receive in consideration of advances commission on the net profits of the partnership business, and large powers of control over the business are given to him, but no power to direct transactions, the Court, if satisfied that the contract was one of loan and security, will not interpret it as constituting a partnership. In applying the English law of partnership to cases in India, the usages of trade and habits of business of the people of India, so far as they may be peculiar and differ from those in England, ought to be borne in mind. Both the memorandum and articles of association of the said new company contained clauses providing that the firm of V J S & Co, or whatever member or members that firm for the time consist of, should be agents of the company so long as the said firm should carry on business in Bombay, or until they should resign. The firm of V J S & Co, having been constituted under the said agreement, became the agents of the said company, and continued to act as such down to the date of the present suit No other business was done by the firm and the three partners divided the profits realized by the firm out of the agency business in the shares specified in the agreement as above mentioned V died in 1874 leaving a will whereby, in exercise of the right vested in him by the agreement, he nomina [illegible]

The will did not refer to the firm or nominate any successor in the partnership In the present suit B as executrix claimed to be entitled to 61 cents or shares in the firm of V J S & Co. up to the date of the testator's death, and to a like share in the profits earned subsequently to his death, or to be earned by the firm so long as it continued to carry on the said agency business of the company The defendant admitted the right of the plaintiff to the share claimed in the profits earned prior to the testator's death, but resisted her claim to any portion of the subsequent profits. Held (1), on the authority of Beamish v. Beamish, Ir Rep, 4 Eq, 120, that the testator's will did not operate as an exercise of the power of nominating a successor in the firm so as to make the plaintiff a partner (2) That [illegible] employed in the business it must have been intended that in default of nomination of a successor by a retiring or deceased partner, the agency should be carried on by the continuing or surviving partners in the name of the firm, and that the interest of the testator in the firm upon his death therefore survived to the defendant Held also that, although the plaintiff was entitled to an account up to the date of the testator's death she was not entitled to a share of the good-will as an asset of the firm. The good will of a firm is attached to the name and in the present case, by the partnership agreement itself the name was to be used by the surviving partners or partner for their own benefit That arrangement took away all value from the good will if indeed it was consistent with its being an asset at all BACHUBAI v SHAMJI JADOWJI I. 9. ———Construction of deed of partnership—Agreement to give managing partner commission—Dissolution of partnership—Loss of commission on dissolution—By an agreement, made on the 10th of January 1857, between K N and several other persons it was agreed that they should form a co-partnership for the purpose of erecting a mill for the manufacture of yarn The capital of the partnership was fixed at R3 00 000, divided into 100 shares of R3 000 each. By the 4th clause of the agreement it was provided that, in return for the trouble K N had been at in establishing the factory "whatever cotton had to be purchased for the factory K N was to purchase, and whatever yarn should be made in the factory K N was to sell, and for whatever he should sell on account of the factory he was duly to receive from the co-partnership his commission at the rate of 5 per cent during his lifetime," and it was also provided that, though the purchases and sales by the co-partnership should not be made through K N, "yet upon the whole amount of the sales the co-partnership was duly to pay 5 per cent to K N during his lifetime" The factory was built, and its machinery procured and set up by K N, and both financially and otherwise the factory was wholly managed by him Shortly after it commenced to work, it was found that the co-partnership had expended all its capital and was heavily involved in debt—incurred by K N without the sanction of his co-partners,—and that the factory was working at a loss; and at the suit of some of them, but against the consent of K N and a minority of the co-partners, the co-partnership was ordered to be dissolved. K N then claimed to be entitled to compensation for the loss of the commission he should have earned upon the sale of the yarn of the factory during his lifetime. Held that he was not so entitled; that as between his co-partners and K N there was no obligation on the former to subscribe more capital after the original capital of the co-partnership had been exhausted; and that there was no implied covenant on the part of co-partnership to continue to work the factory in order that K N should be in a position to earn his commission during his lifetime. Distinction between right to compensation for loss of fixed wages and right to compensation for loss of commission pointed out. When a partnership is wound up by the Court, all questions arising between the partners out of the partnership transactions should be disposed of in the winding-up suit. 10. ———— Payments made by partners—Presumption—Dissolution of partnership.—Payments made by the different partners of a firm are presumed to have been made out of the funds of the firm where the contrary is not proved by any satisfactory evidence; and when a firm consisting of two members is dissolved by the death of one partner, the presumption is that the deceased was entitled to a moiety of the existing assets. Where money was lent on a bond to a "malik and mukhtear" of a factory on his personal credit and the security of the entire factory, and it was afterwards discovered that other parties had a share in the factory, it was held that the lender was not entitled to go beyond his contract and recover from those other parties personally. In the year 1862 the firm of N A & Co. was largely indebted to the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji. At the end of that year the latter firm ceased to do business but no formal dissolution of the partnership ever took place In 1869 the defendant P filed a suit (No. 161 of 1870) in the High Court of Bombay in his own name and that of H J his former partner against the firm of N A & Co for an account of the dealings of that firm with the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji and by a decretal order dated 19th March 1870 the suit was referred to the Commissioner to take the accounts as prayed for On the 17th December 1872 H J died at Hongkong intestate On 22nd February 1873 the defendant P assigned to the second defendant W for R20,000 the claim of the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji against the firm of N K & Co. defendant R R10,000 in 1878, and for the remaining R10,000 gave a promissory note payable in July or August 1881. The plaintiff took out letters of administration to his father H J, and brought this suit on 16th July 1880, claiming a moiety of the R10,000 already paid by the defendant W to the first defendant R, and praying that he might be declared entitled to a moiety of the remaining sum of R10,000 payable by the defendant W, and that the same might be paid over to him. The defendant R alleged that he had assigned the claim against the firm of N K & Co., to the defendant W, and had received the consideration for such assignment in February 1873, and contended that if the plaintiff had ever any claim to any portion of the said money (which he denied), such claim was barred by limitation. He also alleged that he had carried on the suit No. 461 of 1869 without any assistance from the plaintiff's father H J, or from the plaintiff, who, although applied to, refused to assist him, and he submitted that under no circumstances was the plaintiff entitled to any of the moneys claimed by him without giving credit to the defendant for his (plaintiff's) share of the expense of prosecuting the said suit, and for the amount of proper remuneration to the defendant for the time and labour bestowed by him in the said suit. He also claimed that the partnership accounts of the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji should be taken, and alleged that on such accounts being taken a large sum would be found due to him from the partnership. The second defendant W paid into Court the R10,000 due on the promissory note above mentioned, and was dismissed from the suit. At the hearing the Judge found that, of the other moiety of the consideration for the assignment of February 1873, a sum of R1,000 was paid by the defendant W to the defendant R on January 23, 1878, and a sum of R6,000 on September 13, 1879. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation in respect of the said sums of R1,000, R6,000, and R10,000, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a half share of these sums from the defendant R, deducting all sums expended by the defendant in the prosecution of the suit No. 461 of 1869, no allowance, however, being made to him as remuneration for conducting the suit. Held also that the defendant might deduct the amount (if any) which might be found due to him on taking the partnership accounts, although a separate suit for such account would be barred by limitation. The effect of s. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is to extend the English law applicable to trading partnerships to all cases of partnership. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought the suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners, at the time of the release, that in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. Held on the evidence that it had not been proved that all the partners consented to the alleged new partnership, and that on this ground alone the plaintiff could not succeed in his suit. Adultery of one partner with the wife of his co-partner is a sufficient ground for dissolution of the partnership. ABBOTT v. CRUMP 5 B. L. R., 109

44. ——— Death of partner—Deed of partnership—Contract Act, s. 253, cl. 10.—Where one party (A) advanced money to others to carry on business, and an instrument was executed whereby the latter agreed and bound themselves to account yearly to the former for a share of the profits, the transaction was held to amount to an agreement that A should be a party to the business pro tanto. Held that by the operation of the Contract Act of 1872, s. 253, cl. 10, the partnership between A and the others was dissolved by the death of A, and that the representatives of A, by receiving, some six months after his death, an account with a portion of the money advanced and of the profits, did not reconstitute partnership, but rather indicated an opposite intention. 45. ——— Assignment of share in partnership—Contract Act, ss. 253, cl. 6, and 265—Introduction of a new member into firm—Suit for an account.—The effect of cl. 6 of s. 253 of the Contract Act is not to render an assignment of a share in a partnership concern illegal or void as between the parties to the assignment, but only so far void as between those parties and the other partners as to cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership. If no assent is given by the other partners to the assignment, the assignee is on dissolution at liberty to sue for an account and for distribution, not as a partner, but as assignee of the right of his assignor in the partnership property. 46. ——— Right of co-partners to dissolve—Renunciation of right.—A contract between a partner and his co-partners for remuneration to the former for the management of the partnership business by a commission on the sale, during his lifetime, does not, in the absence of any express agreement to that effect, imply a renunciation of the right of the co partners to dissolve the partnership if they find that it cannot be carried on except at a loss; nor does it imply an obligation to pay the managing partner compensation in case the partnership is dissolved for that reason. Rhodes v. *Forwood, L. 48. ——— Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 264.—S. 264 of the Contract Act is not intended to be an exhaustive exposition on the question of notice of a dissolution of partnership. The mode of notification of dissolution required in the case of old customers, who are known to the firm as having dealt with it, is an express or specific notice by circular or otherwise. But in the case of the general public the most effectual public notice which can reasonably be given is requisite. Roop Chund Pundit v. Madhub Chunder Bose, I. L. R., 8 Calc., 681 note, overruled. 49. ——— Effect of dissolution as against party without notice.—Held that dissolution between the members of a carrier's firm or exclusion of one of the members thereof by others in virtue of a partnership agreement would not operate against a third party (a consignor) who had no knowledge of it, and who in his dealing with the firm, in the absence of any notification of change, supposed that the partnership continued unaltered as to its members; and that such dissolution or exclusion would not exempt the retired member of the firm from liability to the consignor's claim, unless it be shown that the latter was aware of the fact of the former having ceased to be a member thereof. After the partnership was dissolved, B and C continued to trade together under the same name and incurred debts to the plaintiffs, who sued to recover the amounts from A, B, and C. The plaintiffs had not dealt with the old partnership, nor received notice of its dissolution, and it was not alleged that they knew of A's previous connection with it. Held that the suits did not lie against A. 2. ——— Suit for infringement of patent—Act XV of 1859, s. 25—Substantial difference in machinery—Injunction—Damages and account of profits.—The fact that a machine has been several times improved since the original patent was obtained is no argument against its being a useful invention within s. 25, Act XV of 1859. Cannington v. Nuttal, L. R., 5 H. L., 205, followed as to the test of "novelty" in an invention. In deciding whether a machine, patented as an entire invention, is an imitation and piracy of another machine previously patented as an entire invention, the question is,—Is the later patented machine substantially the same as the earlier one? The fact of considerable differences existing in the several parts of the two machines will not prevent the latter machine from being, as a whole, a copy of the earlier one; even where an exclusive privilege might have been acquired had the alterations in the later machine been claimed as improvements on the earlier one. Clark v. Adie, 2 App. Cas., 315, followed. Where a patent has been obtained for a machine which the patentee subsequently somewhat improves, a subsequent specification claiming the improved machine as a novel combination is bad, though the improvement might be claimed and protected as such. Where a new arrangement of the parts of a machine is claimed as an improvement, the arrangement must be clearly described in the specification. The mere substitution of one mechanical equivalent for another already in use will not protect it. Where a case of infringement of a patent has been made out, an injunction will follow as a matter of course. A plaintiff cannot pray for an account of profits and for damages He must elect between the two remedies. If the plaintiff elects to take an account of the profits, such accounts will only be carried back to the period of one year before the filing of the plaint, in accordance with Act IX of 1871, art. 11. In his plaint, after describing his inventions, he alleged generally that the defendant had made and used them at a certain place without his license. Held that, as required by s. 34 of Act XV of 1859, the plaintiff should have delivered with his plaint particulars of the breaches complained of; that the general allegation as to infringement contained in the plaint did not amount to such particulars; and that under these circumstances the plaintiff came into Court with a case which could not be tried. PETMAN v. BULL . I. L. R., 5 All., 371

In the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council,—Held the sole object of Act XV of 1859, s. 34, corresponding with s. 41 of the English Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852, is to give the defendant fair notice of the case which he has to meet, and it is quite immaterial whether the requisite information be given in the plaint itself or in a separate paper. Talbot v. La Roche, 15 C. B., 310, and Needham v. Oxley, 1 H. & M., 248, approved. Particulars of breaches must be distinguished from particulars of objections for want of novelty. In the latter case the particular instances may not be within the knowledge of the patentee and must be specified: in the former the defendant must know whether and in what respect he has been guilty of infringement. Where three patents of the plaintiff all related to one article,—a kiln for burning bricks,—and the second and third in date were for improvements upon the invention specified in the first, and the plaintiff alleged a particular kiln constructed and used by the defendant, and in his plaint not only referred to his patents, but indicated in the case of each of them the infringements of which he complained,—Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that this was a sufficient compliance with the Act. 38. ———— Court fees, Recovery of, by Government—Civil Procedure Code, s. 411—Subject-matter of suit—Cross-decrees under same decree.—A plaintiff suing in formâ pauperis to recover property valued at R60,000 obtained a decree for R1,439. The Court, with reference to the provisions of s. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, directed that the plaintiff should pay R1,196 as the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by him if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper. The Collector having applied under s. 411 to recover this amount by attachment of the R1,439 payable to the plaintiff, the defendant objected that (i) certain costs payable to her by the plaintiff under the same decree, and (ii) a sum of money payable to her by the plaintiff under a decree which he had obtained in a cross-suit in the same Court, should be set off against the R1,439 payable by her to him, with reference to ss. 246 and 247 of the Code, and that thus nothing would remain due by her which the Government could recover. No application for execution was made by the plaintiff for his R1,439 or by the defendant for her costs. On appeal from an order allowing the Collector's application, it was contended that the 'subject-matter of the suit' in s. 411 of the Code meant the sum which the successful pauper-plaintiff is entitled to get as a result of his success in the suit; but that in the suit and the cross-suit taken together, the plaintiff ultimately stood to lose a small sum, the defendant being the holder of the larger sum awarded altogether. Held that the contention had no force, as execution had not been taken out by the plaintiff or the defendant or both, and it could not be said that the Government had been trying to execute the plaintiff's decree, or was a representative of the plaintiff as holder of the decretal order in his favour for R1,439, so as to bring into operation the special rules of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code between him and the defendant. Held also that the plaintiff was one who, in the sense of s. 411, had succeeded in respect of part of the "subject-matter" of his suit, and on that part therefore a first charge was by law reserved and secured to the Government, which was justified in recovering it in these proceedings from the defendant, who was ordered by the decree to pay it in the same way as costs are ordinarily recoverable under the Code. Held that the decrees in the suit and the cross-suit not having reached a stage in which the provisions of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code would come into play, no questions of set-off and consequent reduction or other modification of the "subject-matter" of the suit decreed against the defendant as payable by her to the plaintiff had arisen or could be entertained. 6. ——— Payment to stay sale in execution of decree—Suit to recover.—Certain property which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff by a bond executed by J D on 25th February 1867 was sold to him in execution of a decree passed upon that bond on 3rd September 1868. Before such sale, but after the above mortgage, the property was attached by the first defendant, in execution of a decree of 1865 (i.e., J D's equity of redemption was attached), and a part of the property was sold. The sale was set aside for irregularity, but the attachment remaining, the first defendant resumed proceedings in execution and got an order for sale, when the plaintiff released it from liability to such sale by paying into Court the money due, which he now sought to recover. Held that the first defendant had a right to sell the right and interest of J D in the property, and was therefore entitled to keep the money which saved the sale. 8. ——— Payment to protect property from sale.—P lent money to S upon a specially registered tumsook pledging immoveable property, and afterwards obtained a decree under Act XX of 1866, s. 53, for principal and interest. More than four years later, he brought a further suit against S to recover the interest due under the same bond. Meanwhile plaintiffs also lent money to S under a bond by which the same property was pledged, and also recovered a decree in execution of which the property was sold. P then proceeded to attach the same property in execution of his second decree, when plaintiffs objected under Act VIII of 1859, s. 246, but ineffectually; and after that, to protect the property which they had purchased, they paid a sum of money into Court which was subsequently taken out by P. They now sued to recover that money. Held that, under the circumstances, the payment of the money into Court was not a voluntary payment, and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover it. PAYMENT INTO COURT—concluded.

10. ——— Payment by purchaser into the Post Office within time—Money not received by the Court until after expiration of time allowed by section—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 307.—A purchaser at an execution sale was bound under s. 307 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court on the 19th June 1896. On the 17th June he paid in the amount to the Post Office at Yellapur, and obtained a money order which he sent to the Nazir of the Court. The Nazir did not receive the money until the 22nd June. Held that the payment was not in time. The Post Office is not the agent of the Court, and the purchaser was bound to see that the money reached the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307. RAMCHANDRA KRISHNAPA v. BELYA . I. 11. ——— Order in execution that defendant pay money into Court—Appeal by plaintiff against order—Payment into Court by defendant—Refusal of plaintiff pending appeal to take money out of Court—Attachment of the money so paid in by another creditor of defendant and payment to him—Subsequent application by plaintiff in execution for payment—Effect of his previous refusal.—In execution of a decree against the defendant obtained by the plaintiff, an order was made, directing the defendant (inter alia) to pay into Court the sum of R140-8-0. Both parties appealed against this order, but pending the appeals the defendant paid the amount into Court. The plaintiff, however, refused to take it, on the ground that he had appealed against the order under which it was paid in; and the Court subsequently passed an order that the money should be returned to the defendant. But before this could be done, the money was attached by a third person, in execution of his decree against the defendant, and a few days afterwards the money was paid over to him. Shortly afterwards the appeal against the order directing the defendant to pay R140-8-0 to the plaintiff was heard and the order was confirmed. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied in execution (inter alia) for payment of the sum of R140-8-0. The defendant contended that he had already paid it. The Subordinate Judge directed the defendant to pay this sum into Court within one month. The defendant appealed to the District Court, who confirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant then appealed to the High Court. Held that the orders of the lower Courts should be reversed. When the defendant paid the R140 8-0 into Court in execution of the decree, the Court held the money on account of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, who had not obtained a stay of execution, could not refuse to take it, because an appeal was pending. The plaintiff's refusal, therefore, to take the money out of Court did not justify the Subordinate Judge in treating the money as the defendant's and in ordering it to be paid to another judgment-creditor of the defendant without his having in any way expressed his assent to the money being so treated. ——— s. 81 and s. 323—Act likely to cause harm, done without a criminal intent and to prevent other harm—Causing hurt.—The accused was a sepoy in a native infantry regiment. On the occasion of a fire in the city of Ahmednagar, he and the rest of his company turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He with other sepoys was stationed by their officer with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, and not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. The police under the city chief constable were also engaged at the fire, and on some one of them coming round from the rear, they were warned off by the sentries. A fracas between the soldiers and the police took place, and the chief constable was kicked by the accused. For this he was charged before the Magistrate, and fined for voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code. In evidence it appeared that the police attempted to force the military guard, which had been posted as above stated, and it was further proved that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was. It was not alleged that the kick was unnecessarily violent. Held that the conviction was bad. The Magistrate having found that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was, the kick was justifiable as given in good faith for the purpose of preventing much greater harm under s. 81 of the Indian Penal Code, and as a means of acting up to the military order. 2. ——— Capacity of understanding to commit offence.—An objection that the accused is of such an age as not to have attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct is not one of a preliminary character, but rather a matter of defence to be considered with the other issues arising in the case. Where the accused is over seven years of age and under twelve, the incapacity to commit an offence only arises where the child has not attained sufficient maturity, etc.: such non-attainment would have apparently to be specially pleaded and proved. The "consequences of his conduct" mentioned in s. 83, Penal Code, are not the penal consequences to the offender, but the natural consequences which flow from a voluntary act. sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. Per RANADE, J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or good-will, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and prepossesses the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government,—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder. 4. ———— Exciting disaffection—Meaning of the term "disaffection" explained.—Any one who, by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Penal Code, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity, or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A. Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term "disaffection" may be taken as synonymous with "disloyalty." The ordinary meaning of the term "disaffection" as used in s. 124A is not varied by the explanation appended to that section. When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s. 124A of the Penal Code, his intention may be inferred from one particular speech, article, or letter, or from that speech, article, or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said, written, or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken, written, or published could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection, and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false, and, except on the question of punishment, or in a case in which the speaker, writer, or publisher is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection, it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection. Queen-Empress v. *Jogendra Chunder Bose, I. sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. Per RANADE, J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or good-will, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and prepossesses the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government,—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN

4. ———— Exciting disaffection—Meaning of the term "disaffection" explained.—Any one who, by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Penal Code, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity, or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A. Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term "disaffection" may be taken as synonymous with "disloyalty." The ordinary meaning of the term "disaffection" as used in s. 124A is not varied by the explanation appended to that section. When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s. 124A of the Penal Code, his intention may be inferred from one particular speech, article, or letter, or from that speech, article, or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said, written, or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken, written, or published could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection, and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false, and, except on the question of punishment, or in a case in which the speaker, writer, or publisher is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection, it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection. Queen-Empress v. *Jogendra Chunder Bose, I. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally, extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely, the Ghatis and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. 4. ———— Sanction to prosecution—Code of Criminal Procedure (1882), s. 195—Execution of decree which has been satisfied.—A decree-holder applied for execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decree had been satisfied out of Court. The judgment-debtor then applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decree-holder under s. 210 of the Penal Code. Held that such sanction must be revoked, because the decree had not been caused to be executed, and therefore no offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code had been committed. 11. ——— Buying or selling minor for the purpose of prostitution, etc.—Certain persons, falsely representing that a minor girl of a low caste was a member of a higher caste, induced a member of such higher caste to take her in marriage and to pay money for her in the full belief that such representation was true. Held per STUART, C.J., that such persons could not be convicted on these facts of offences under ss. 372 and 373 of the Penal Code. Per OLDFIELD, J., and STRAIGHT, J., that if such girl was disposed of for the purpose of marriage, it could not be said, because the marriage might be invalid under Hindu law, that such persons acted with the intention that she should be employed or used for the purposes of prostitution or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or that they knew it to be likely that she would be employed or used for such purpose, and consequently they could not be convicted of an offence under these sections. Per PEARSON, J., and SPANKIE, J., that such girl having been disposed of for the purpose of marriage, although the marriage might be objectionable under Hindu law, it did not appear that it was wholly invalid, and therefore such intent or knowledge could not certainly be presumed, and such persons could not be convicted of offences under those sections. 12. ——— and s. 373 —Obtaining a minor for prostitution—Dancing-girl caste—Adoption.—A woman, being a member of the dancing-girl caste, obtained possession of a minor girl and employed her for the purpose of prostitution; she subsequently obtained in adoption another minor girl from her parents, who belonged to the same caste. She and the parents of the second girl were charged together under ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code. The charges related to both girls. Held that ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code may be applicable in a case where the minor concerned is a member of the dancing-girl caste. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—It would be no offence if the intention was that the girl should be brought up as a daughter, and that, when she attains her age, she should be allowed to select either to marry or follow the profession of her prostitute mother. 13. ——— Disposing of a minor for immoral purposes—Abetment—Offence committed out of British India.—A minor girl under the age of sixteen years was taken by accused No. 1, under the direction of accused No. 2, from Sholapur to Tuljapur (in the Nizam's territory), and there dedicated to the goddess Amba, with intent or knowing it to be likely that the minor would be used for purposes of prostitution. The District Magistrate of Sholapur convicted accused No. 1 of an offence under s. 372 and accused No. 2 of abetment of the offence under ss. 372 and 108A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them each to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that there was no offence committed in British India, and therefore the accused No. 2 was not guilty of abetment, and s. 108A of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute any offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. The intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl to Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment. 2. ——— Obtaining possession of minor for purposes of prostitution—Offence defined by above section explained.—To constitute the offence provided for by s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is necessary, first, that a minor under sixteen years of age shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, and, secondly, that the minor shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, with the intent that the same minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed for the purposes of prostitution, or with the knowledge that it is likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed or used for an unlawful and immoral purpose. The offence is complete so soon as the obtaining possession, with the requisite intention or knowledge, of the minor is accomplished, though the minor may not enter upon prostitution until years after she has attained maturity, or may never enter upon such a profession at all. Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. *Karuna Baistobi, I. Onus of proving guilty intention in case of sale of minor for purpose of prostitution—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 106 —In order to constitute an offence under s 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be with reference to employment either immediate or at some definite and not very remote future period, but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under the age of sixteen years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose H, the father of two girls twins about a year old, sold one of them to K, a prostitute, for R9, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other f r R14 K was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her and leading the life of a prostitute Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest, and immediately thereafter she was committed to hajat for seven days On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, she retracted her confession and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl H and K were tried jointly, H being charged with an offence under s 372, viz, selling the girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s 373, viz, buying for the same purpose Neither was charged with abetting the other The two confessions were used as evidence, and there was other evidence tending to prove the intention and guilty knowledge The Deputy Magistrate convicted each of the offence with which they were charged On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted K on the ground that the offence under s 373 could not be committed unless the intention was that the minor was to be used for the purpose of prostitution at some definite future time, and that it would be carrying the law too far to hold that the intention had reference to a period some twelve or fourteen years after [illegible]

The accused was thereupon committed to the Court of Session on a charge under s. 475 of the Penal Code. A few days before the trial of the accused, the police searched the house of one S, who was a witness for the defence, and there discovered a batch of suspicious papers which were produced at the trial, and put in as evidence against the accused. The accused was convicted of the offence under s. 475 of the Penal Code and sentenced to transportation for life. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the suspicious papers found in S's house were not admissible in evidence against the accused. Held, further, that the Judge's direction to the jury regarding those papers, that they established a connection between the accused and many of the witnesses belonging to the same faction, and that they showed the extent to which the practice of forgery had gone in the village, and that in this way they were relevant to the question of guilty knowledge and intention, was a misdirection which prejudiced the accused. In the trial of an accused person on a charge under s. 475 of the Penal Code, the charge should be so framed as to specify distinctly that part of the section which is applicable to the case, and should distinctly specify the particular papers bearing a counterfeit mark or device which the accused was alleged to have had in his possession with the intent mentioned in the section. of the public does not constitute an offence under s. 505, but it is necessary that the fear or alarm should be caused in such circumstances as to render it likely that a person may be induced to commit an offence against the State or against the public tranquillity. Account cannot be taken in a case of this kind of a vague possibility that the state of mind which is caused by alarm may easily induce a person to commit an offence against the public tranquillity. This would depend on the circumstances of a particular case. The accused, a duffadar of a tea estate in Darjeeling, who had recently returned from Nepal, circulated a report among the garden coolies that a war was impending between the British Government and Nepal, that Nepalese soldiers were stationed on the frontier, and that the coolies would be killed by the British. The effect of the report was that about 150 coolies immediately ran away. Held that the accused could not be taken to have intended more than the probable result of the report he circulated, the result which, in fact, did take place. PENSIONS ACT (VI OF 1849).

1. ——— Arrears of pension, Succession to—Heirs—Succeeding grantee.—Arrears of pension due to the deceased at the time of her death form part of her estate, and the person who is legal heir to the deceased is entitled to recover them. The Agent for Sardars, affirming the decree of the Assistant Agent, found the agreement to be null and void as an assignment of a future interest in a pension. Held that, as the pension was not granted "in consideration of past service and present infirmities or old age," the case did not come within the terms of Act VI of 1849, and that the agreement was a valid one. option of resuming the collection of the toda garas hak formerly levied, resorting only to legal proceedings to enforce their claims, or of receiving from the Government allowances of an equivalent amount, the collections in the latter case being discontinued on all hands. The ancestors of the adoptive father of the plaintiff formerly levied toda garas hak; and after 1862 the Government in respect thereof made payments, under the resolution, to three brothers, of whom one was the plaintiff's father; the latter receiving a one-third share, which on his death in 1865 was no longer paid. Held that a suit against the Government for payment of this third share with arrears fell under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, which prohibits cognizance, save as in the Act provided, "of any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for such pension or grant, or whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim, or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted." Held that there was no reason, either in the language of the Act itself or in any antecedent legislation, for construing these words as applicable only to rights in the nature of pensions. S. 5 prescribes a remedy for the claimant of such pension or grant, and s. 6 enables the Revenue officer to refer the parties to the Civil Court for the determination of their respective interests in the income or other benefits, which the executive will, however, still, as against either or both of the litigants, be at liberty to allow or withhold. The plaintiffs now sued to have their right declared to satisfy their decree from the revenues of the villages. Held that the former suit was not a suit in respect of a pension or grant of money of land revenue, and that an attachment placed in pursuance of an ordinary money-decree before the date of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) could not be treated as a suit in respect of a pension, grant of money, or land revenue instituted before such date, so as to exclude the operation of the Act under s. 1. This grant was subsequently confirmed to a descendant of S and his heirs. Some years later the land came into the possession of the Raja of Burdwan, who paid to the grantees a certain sum of money annually. When the perpetual settlement was made, the British Government continued the payment on account of the Raja, in whose zamindari four of the five mouzahs were incorporated. Owing to disputes in the family, a reference was made to Government, who reduced the money payment and appointed a mutwalli for the tomb. One of the descendants of S then sued the Government and the mutwalli for a share of this annual payment. Held that the grant to S's family was not a gratuitous pension or allowance, and that the money payment by the zamindar of Burdwan was rent justly due to them for the use and occupation of their land, and that the fact of the payment being continued by Government did not alter its nature.

The property was long managed by the representative, for the time being, of the senior line. In 1814 one of the junior members instituted a suit for partition, which terminated in a decree declaring the corpus of the property to be indivisible and the annual produce to be divisible in certain shares. Subsequently in 1857 a compromise was entered into, by which the parties agreed to vary the distribution of the sharers, but they agreed that the management of the estate, indivisible and inalienable, should continue to be vested in the eldest line subject to certain supervision on the part of the other members. The compromise was long acted upon by the family; but in 1892 the representative of the senior line died, leaving only his widow and infant sons. The widow, as guardian of the elder son, then entered on the management, and, being gosha, delegated it to a stranger. The plaintiffs, representing a junior line, now sued for the removal of these persons from management and the appointment of another manager, alleging both that they had no right to the managership and that they had been guilty of mismanagement.

2. ———— Political pension of Zamorin of Calicut—"Payable"—Power of disposition by will.—The Zamorin of Calicut, whether he be or not a member of a kovilagom, is entitled to dispose of the separate property by a will. The Zamorin, by his will, bequeathed to the plaintiff the malikana due to him from the Government which might be in arrears at the time of his death. The malikana was a political pension of R6,000 a month, payable quarterly. The Zamorin died on the 6th of August 1892. The plaintiff, having obtained a certificate under Pensions Act, s. 6, now sued the new Zamorin to recover the proportionate amount of the pension for the current quarter up to the time of the Zamorin's death. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount sued for. s. 53—Amendment of plaint—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 22.—In a suit to recover a debt to a company which had gone into liquidation, the plaintiff was described in the plaint as "The Official Liquidator, Himalaya Bank, Limited, in liquidation," and the plaint was signed and verified in the same terms. On objection taken by the defendant, the plaint was allowed to be amended, but after the period of limitation prescribed for the suit had expired, so as to read "The Himalaya Bank, Limited, in liquidation, plaintiff." Held by the Full Bench that the plaint as originally filed was in substantial compliance with the provisions of Act VI of 1882; and that, even if it might be considered that the amendment made was necessary, such amendment did not introduce a new plaintiff into the suit so as to let in the operation of s. 22 of Act XV of 1877. Ghulam Muhammad v. *Himalaya Bank, I. If such defect be not discovered until the suit comes on appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court may, if it thinks fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect is such that it is covered by the provisions of s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there is no necessity for the Appellate Court to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint. In any event, a defect in the verification of a plaint will not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit. Balgobind Das v. Ganno Bibi, Weekly Notes, All. (1896), 75, referred to. A plaint filed by three joint plaintiffs was verified by each in the form: "The contents of the petition of plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and belief." Held that this form of verification, though not free from ambiguity, was in substantial compliance with the provisions of s. 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A defect in the signature of the plaint, or the absence of signature, where it appears that the suit was in fact filed with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff named therein, may be waived by the defendant, or, if necessary, cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and having regard to s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not a ground for interference in appeal. Rajit Ram v. *Katesar Nath, I. The plaintiff deposited R100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January 1883 (i.e., four days before the contract) at R25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled, and sought to recover the deposit of R100, with interest. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Broach, being of opinion that the contract was in its nature a sutta or wagering contract, rejected the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, to set aside the lower Court's decision. Held that, in the first instance, the plaint, as framed, not disclosing any cause of action, ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract, or should have contained an allegation of fraud, on the defendant's part, inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact" would not, under s. 22 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), have made the contract voidable. The Munsif allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by stating that he abandoned his claim to execute the decree against the land for more than R2,500. 146. ———— Charges of fraud—General allegations of fraud—Amendment of plaint on appeal—Objection taken for first time on appeal.—Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disclose a cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. The plaint described the defendant as "Mrs. Sarah G. Barlow, of Mussoorie," and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B. It began thus: "George Henry Webb, Manager of the above-named plaintiff's business, states as follows," and proceeded to state that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "indebted to the plaintiff," and to set forth the cause of action in detail. It was signed and verified thus: "For the B Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, Manager." The Court of first instance returned the plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the suit should not have been brought in the form in which it was brought, but in the form referred to in s. 213 and No. 105 of Sch. IV of the Code. Held, with reference to this ground, that the plaintiff was at liberty to bring a suit for money against any person administering to or representing the estate; and if such suit should be found with reference to the facts in evidence not maintainable, it should be dismissed; but there was no authority for returning a plaint for amendment, when it was found that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, in order to amend it so as to convert the suit into one of a different character. The other raiyats of the village in whom the same right vested were originally joined as plaintiffs, but the plaint was amended under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their names were struck off the record. A proved no special damage. Held (1) that the fact that the other raiyats of the village had similar rights did not make A's right a public right in the sense that no action could be brought upon it unless special damage was proved; (2) that the right claimed vested in A severally as well as jointly with the other raiyats, and the amendment of the plaint was not contrary to the provisions of s. 31 or 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. 157. ——— Joinder of causes of action—Same parties suing in different capacities—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 26 and 31.—By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the New Dhurumsey Poonjabhoy Spinning and Weaving Company, the plaintiffs' firm of M F & Co. were appointed agents of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the company. Cl. 98 of the articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for the purposes of the transaction and management of the affairs and business of the company, such solicitors as they should think proper. An agreement, dated 26th August 1874, was also entered into between the company and the partners in the firm of M F & Co, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the time being constituting the partnership firm of M F & Co., whereby it was agreed that the said firm should be agents to the company for twenty-five years to buy and sell, etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 98 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. C & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. M, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 8th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a Board meeting to the effect that, as Messrs. C & B, the company's solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable, for the interests of the company, that a change should be made, and that Messrs. H C & L be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G, of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874 and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of M, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs sought to obtain the injunction on the ground that the resolution of the 8th August 1881 appointing Messrs. H C & L solicitors of the company, was contrary to the Memorandum of Association, and therefore ultra vires; and, in order that this point might be pressed against the defendants, it was proposed that the plaint should be amended by alleging a cause of action in two of the plaintiffs as shareholders as well as a cause of action in all the plaintiffs as parties contracting with the company. Held that, under the provisions of ss. 26 and 31 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), the amendment could not be allowed. The plaintiffs, as shareholders and contractors, had not the same cause of action, by which words were meant not only the act complained of, but also the right violated by that act. The rights of the plaintiffs as contractors, alleged to be violated by the resolution, were rights given to them by their agreement; but the rights of the plaintiffs as shareholders were rights secured to them by the Articles of Association. that he was a license-holder. The present suit was brought against the Government represented by the Deputy Commissioner for damages on account of wrongful acts of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was made second defendant. The Judge, holding that where a servant does a wrongful act maliciously he is personally liable and the master is free, left it to the plaintiff to say against whom he would proceed. The plaintiff elected to proceed against Government and obtained a decree for a part of his claim. In the lower Appellate Court the Judges were divided in opinion, the Recorder holding that the first Court was justified in allowing the plaintiff to abandon his suit against the second defendant, to whom malice had been imputed, and that the suit was still maintainable against the Government; and the Judicial Commissioner, considering it irregular to allow this action, inasmuch as the claims for damages on account of the illegal and malicious acts of the second defendant and for damages for non-issue of license by the first defendant were inconsistent with each other. Held by the High Court that the view of the Recorder was correct. Nevertheless, the plaintiff ought not to have been put to the option of abandoning his suit against one or other defendant, but the suit should have been tried out. Held, too, that the allegations against the two defendants were distinct, but not inconsistent, and that the Judicial Commissioner had taken too strict a view of the plaint. (Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of a plaint or memorandum of appeal being returned to the plaintiff, or appellant, after a case has been heard on its merits, and just as the plaintiff or appellant discovers that the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. There is no provision in the Code for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff after it has been admitted, and the court-fee stamps thereon cancelled. Even if the Code allowed the High Court to return a plaint after the court-fee stamps have been cancelled, the plaint could not be again legally presented in any Court without new stamps being affixed to it. (Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of a plaint or memorandum of appeal being returned to the plaintiff, or appellant, after a case has been heard on its merits, and just as the plaintiff or appellant discovers that the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. There is no provision in the Code for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff after it has been admitted, and the court-fee stamps thereon cancelled. Even if the Code allowed the High Court to return a plaint after the court-fee stamps have been cancelled, the plaint could not be again legally presented in any Court without new stamps being affixed to it. The plaint was accordingly returned, and additional stamps having been filed, the case was tried by the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Judge on appeal held that the plaint had been illegally returned by the Munsif, and that the act of the Principal Sudder Ameen in proceeding to try the case was illegal. He accordingly dismissed the suit. Held that the Munsif was right, under s. 31, Act VIII of 1859, in not dismissing the suit, but rejecting the plaint; and that, when the same plaint was filed with the proper amount of stamp duty in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that Court had jurisdiction to try the case. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim was for recovery of money, and should have been valued at R1,000. He therefore called on the plaintiffs to make up the stamp to that required on this valuation; and the plaintiffs refusing, he dismissed their suit under s. 54 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was really one for an account, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief they sought approximately, as they had done; if it were not one for an account, but for recovery of money, still the Subordinate Judge had no power himself to value the relief sought, but should have called on the defendant to value the relief he sought, and then, if he had thought such relief was undervalued, he could have applied s. 54 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and rejected the suit. In a plaint claiming damage for an unsuccessful criminal prosecution of the plaintiff by the first defendant, and sanctioned by the second defendant as a Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff (though stating in the plaint that the second defendant "maliciously and without authority" sanctioned the prosecution, and that the Magistrate before whom it was brought held that there was no cause whatever for the charge) did not allege in the plaint that the first defendant prosecuted him (plaintiff) maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, or that the prosecution was sanctioned by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held that the plaint was properly rejected, and that there was no good ground for allowing the plaint to be amended, the plaintiff having delayed the filing of it until the last day but one allowed by the law of limitation. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him and objected to go to another village where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.) that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. 8. ———— Pleaders and their clients, their rights and obligations inter se—Bom. Reg. II of 1827—Confidential communications made in the course of professional employment.—The rules prevailing in England with regard to the rights and obligations of solicitors in relation to their clients apply, with slight difference, to pleaders practising in India. The principles deducible from the English cases are as follows: 1. A party to a judicial proceeding is entitled to such professional assistance as he thinks will best suit him. 2. A pleader is free to place his services at the disposal of any such party upon such terms as he may think most advantageous to himself consistently with the honour of his profession and the due administration of justice. 3. A pleader who receives any confidential information from his client in the course of his professional employment is not at liberty to carry that information into the service of his antagonist, or any one who in that very litigation or in any subsequent litigation may be opposed to the client furnishing the information. 4. Under Regulation II of 1827, pleaders receive certain fees, in return for which they are not at liberty to act against those retaining them, whether they are retained by one client singly or by two or more clients jointly. A pleader who has acted for several persons will not be restrained from afterwards acting for some of them only as against the others, unless it be shown that he is possessed of knowledge arising from his previous employment which might be prejudicial to his other clients. As a general rule, the Court will require a very strong case to be made out before it will interfere by way of injunction, restraining a pleader from appearing for a client, and there must be clear affidavits made to show that special knowledge was acquired by the pleader during his employment by the former client. In case of his possessing such knowledge, he will not be allowed to throw up the conduct of the case and transfer his services. He will never be allowed to discharge himself from the conduct of the case if the case raises even a probability of prejudice to his former employers. K, a pleader, was at first retained by P and N jointly to defend a suit on their behalf. At a later stage of the case, P and N quarrelled. Thereupon K applied to the Court for leave to withdraw from the conduct of the case, on the ground that he could not attend to the interests of both P and N. The Court allowed him to withdraw. A few days afterwards K appeared in Court, and filed a vakalatnama, or warrant or attorney, signed by N, and claimed to conduct the case on behalf of N alone. P objected to this, but the Court disallowed this objection. Thereupon P made an application to the High Court for an injunction restraining K from acting on behalf of N alone. Held that, as it was not made out that K was in possession of any confidential information either from P or from P and N together, such as would give him an unfair advantage when acting on behalf of N, the Court would not interfere or restrain K from serving N alone. Held, further, that a pleader in such circumstances should take the direction of the Court as to which of two or more clients he is to serve, and as to the disposal of the fees he has received from them jointly. 9. ———— Pleader's absence from Court owing to his temporary appointment as a Subordinate Judge—"Necessary cause"—Bom. Reg. II of 1827, s. 54.—On the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, neither the plaintiff nor his pleader was present; the defendant, not having been served, was also absent. Plaintiff's pleader, however, sent intimation to the Court in writing that he had been appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, and as he was going that day to join his appointment, he was unable to attend the Court. He therefore requested that the case should be adjourned till his return, or that a notice be issued to his client to enable him to make the necessary arrangements for the conduct of his case. Held that the pleader, having been temporarily appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, was unable to attend the Court in consequence of a "necessary cause" within the meaning of s. 54 of Regulation II of 1827; and as he had sent the necessary notification in writing to the Court, the suit should not be dismissed, but adjourned for a reasonable time. None but barristers and attorneys have a legal right to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes. Neither ss. 2 and 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) nor ss. 38 and 76 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) give the pleaders of the Bombay High Court that right. The provisions of s. 47 of Regulation II of 1827, authorizing persons holding sanads from the High Court to practise in the mofussil Courts, are still in force. Per BAYLEY, WEST, PINHEY, and LATHAM, JJ.—S. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not give every pleader a title to appear and plead; it only enacts that "pleader" means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court. Consequently, if pleaders or vakils, who are the same class of practitioners, are not entitled by law to appear or plead for another in Court, the definition of "pleader" gives them no new right or status. The words in s. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) "by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf," do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court. Per PINHEY, SCOTT, and LATHAM, JJ. (WEST, J., dissentiente).—The High Court has the power of making rules for the admission of pleaders to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes; and the Bombay Court of Small Causes, under s. 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), also has the power of making similar rules with the sanction of the High Court. 84. ——— Pleader's taids—Mooktear—Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879)—Ministerial duties of pleaders, Delegation of, to their bonâ fide clerks.—A Judge has a right to control his Court premises in such way as is most convenient to the public and to persons working there, but does not act rightly in passing any general order by which he excludes as a general body from his Court any portion of the community acting in an orderly manner. The pleaders of this country are a body of men who, from the earliest times, have combined in their own persons the duties performed in England by barristers and attorneys, and in acting in this second and ministerial capacity are, on their own responsibility, entitled to work through any number of clerks or taids properly selected and paid by them; and no Court other than a High Court as established by Charter has the right to make rules defining the ministerial duties to be performed by them as distinct from the duties of their bonâ fide taids or clerks, nor does the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879 control in any way the privileges which have always existed in them or restrict their powers, the Act being one passed to bring mooktears under the control of the Court. 89. ——— Unprofessional conduct—Commission to mooktears—Act XX of 1865—Criminal offence.—A, a pleader, was engaged by B, who was acting on behalf of C, to defend certain persons charged with the offences of rioting and of having caused grievous hurt. Two of the accused persons were relatives of C. A agreed with B that, if all the accused were acquitted, his fee was to be R500; if the two who were the relatives of C were acquitted, then he was to receive R250; but in the event of none of the accused being acquitted, he was to receive only R40. Before the trial B paid A R475; this having come to the knowledge of C, he telegraped, saying that the fee was exorbitant, and A, upon being remonstrated with, handed over R250 to a banker to be placed to his (A's) credit. A alleged that, out of R225 which remained with him, he paid R140 to B as commission, and that R25 were paid to his mohurir. Held that A was guilty of fraudulent and grossly improper conduct. He was suspended from practising for the period of one year. Per PONTIFEX, J.—If a mooktear, paid for his services by his employer, were to receive in addition, without the knowledge of his employer, a percentage or commission from the pleader, he would be answerable, not only in the Civil Court, but also in the Criminal Court, to a charge of obtaining money improperly from his employer. The words "open place," coupled with "road, street, or thoroughfare," should not be interpreted ejusdem generis. It seems rather that the addition of these words was intended to have a wider significance, and this is shown by another amendment in the same section made at the same time in which the annoyance, etc., caused must be not to the residents and passengers, but to the residents or passengers. The intention of the Legislature was to extend the Act not only to passengers who would not be on such a road, street, or thoroughfare, but to residents, who are not passengers. KHAN BAPUTI DEWAN v. [4 B. L. R., F. B., 97 : 13 W. R., F. B., 42

2. ——— Acts of ownership.—A witness's statement that a party "is in possession" is no evidence of the fact. The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact, and the evidence produced must give the various acts of ownership which go to constitute possession, so that the Court may arrive at its own conclusion. In 1863 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff requesting him to return and manage his share of the property or to employ some one to manage it for him. Nothing, however, was done by the plaintiff in the matter, and the defendant continued in possession. In 1882 the plaintiff sued the defendant for partition. In 1881 the defendant P obtained a decree against R for Rs2,000 In execution of this decree, the house was sold, and P bought it himself and obtained possession on 17th January 1884 While that suit was pending the plaintiff T, the grandson of A, brought a suit (No 217 of 1881) against the son of D (the original mortgagee) and R to redeem the mortgage of 1845 and recover possession The plaintiff obtained a decree against D's son for redemption, and proceeded to execute the decree He was obstructed by R's son, who, however, in a suit (No. 205 of 1882) was found to have no right to the house The present suit was brought in 1884 by the plaintiff to recover the house from the defendant Held that the suit was barred The defendant in 1884 purchased the house from R, who had bought it in 1856 from N P's possession since that time had been adverse to the plaintiff There can be adverse possession of the equity of redemption and N's possession had been adverse up to the sale in 1856 PUTTAPPA v TIMMAJI . . . The plaint bore a stamp sufficient to cover a suit for recovery of possession. Held that, inasmuch as the effect of the refusal of the Collector to register the plaintiff's name under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876) was to prevent the plaintiff recovering the rent of the estate, and that such refusal was alleged in the plaint, the suit might be taken to be in substance a suit for recovery of possession, and ought not to have been dismissed. Amir Hossein v. *Imambandi Begum, 11 C. Parties who, though not actually involved in the dispute, claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s. 145, should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. It is impossible to lay down any hard-and-fast rule which may be applicable to all cases as to the exact point of time to which an inquiry under s. 145 must be directed, and the time at which possession must be found in one party or the other must be governed by the facts of each particular case. To hold that the Magistrate is precluded from inquiring into anything before the date when he actually commenced his own proceedings might in some cases lead to a person who has been acting in an unwarrantable manner misusing the process of the law to enable him to carry out a high-handed and improper scheme, which could never have been the intention of the Legislature. In a proceeding under s. 145 regarding a dispute between two parties concerning certain collieries, it appeared that the first party were certainly in possession of the buildings which contained the office where the business of the collieries was transacted, and where all the cash books and papers of the business were kept, and that the second party had during a period of about fourteen days prior to the commencement of the proceedings succeeded in obtaining possession of the pits, wharves, tramways, etc., of the colliery by what the Court considered to be a high-handed and improper scheme, and acting in an unwarrantable manner. The Magistrate, considering himself bound to find who was in actual possession at the date of the commencement of the proceedings by himself, passed an order in favour of the second party. Held that such order was bad, and that, as the second party was undoubtedly not in possession of the whole of the property in dispute, and the effect of it was to place them in possession of the portion that was in the possession of the first party, the proper order to make under such circumstances was one under s. 146, attaching the property. 158. ———— Dispute about the right of performing worship and other religious rites in temples—Jurisdiction of Magistrates to interfere in cases where Civil Courts cannot grant relief—Procedure to be adopted where breach of the peace is apprehended—Right of suit.—A Magistrate, first class, made an order under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), forbidding certain persons from taking part in the worship and other religious ceremonies connected with certain temples. As to the right to perform these ceremonies, the High Court had previously held that Civil Courts could not determine trivial questions of mere dignity or privilege. Held that, the matters in dispute not being adjudicable by a Civil Court, s. 147 did not give the Magistrate jurisdiction to forbid the persons named in the order from taking part in the ceremonies in question. Held also that the order was bad in form, as it contained no restriction of the time during which it was to operate. Held further that, in cases where a Magistrate apprehends a breach of the peace, his proper course is to act under the provisions of Ch. VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). IN RE ATMARAM NARAYAN PARAB

The right of use of land contemplated by s. 147 is one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement, not one arising from the terms of a contract between landlord and tenant. A dispute between the landlord and tenant regarding the right of the latter to erect or re-erect a gola which has fallen down is not a matter properly coming within s. 147 of the Code. The settlement of such a dispute, involving issues of right, can be properly determined by a Civil Court. EMPRESS v. GANPAT KALWAR 4 C. W. N., 779

160. ———— Right of fishing—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 147—Easements—Profits à prendre—Parties to the inquiry.—The words "right to do anything in or upon tangible immoveable property" in s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code include the right of fishing. The term "easements" includes profits à prendre; it has not been used by the Legislature of this country in the restricted sense in which it is used in English law so as to exclude profits à prendre. For the purposes of an inquiry contemplated under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is sufficient if the persons who claim for themselves the right, though that right is derived from others, are made parties. The proprietors are not necessary parties. Ram Chandra Das v. Monohur Roy, I. L. R., 21 Calc., 29, and Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal, I. L. R., 21 Calc., 727, distinguished. A Magistrate is competent to take action under that section in the case of a dispute concerning the exercise of a julkur right. Dukhi Mulluh v. Halway, I. L. R., 23 Calc., 55, followed. If the materials upon which the proceedings are based do not disclose the fact that there is an imminent danger of a breach of the peace, then the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 168. Order as to person dispossessed from immoveable property by criminal force Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s 534 —An order under s. 534 Criminal Procedure Code, must be founded on a finding that the person in whose favour it was made was dispossessed of specific immoveable property by the use of criminal force, which formed a material ingredient in the matter of a criminal conviction, and it must in terms restore such person to the property from which he had been dispossessed. 170 ———————— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss 522, 523, 524—Order to restore possession of immoveable property. —An order made under s 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), restoring possession of immoveable property to a person who has been dispossessed of it by criminal force, is an independent order and may be made subsequently to the date of the conviction of the offender It need not be made at the same time as the conviction The case [illegible]

if they are, the order is not thereby necessarily invalid. Cl 2 of the section gives them a remedy by civil suit. On 27th September 1897 complainant charged one R with criminal trespass under s 447 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) He alleged that in the previous July R had entered into possession of the land and sowed rice upon it, and that, when in the month of September 1897 he (the complainant) went to the field, R had turned him out by force and refused to vacate the land. On the 17th November 1897 the case was heard by the Third Class Magistrate who convicted R of the offence charged. On the following day (18th November 1897) the complainant applied to the Magistrate under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to be restored to possession of the land and of the standing crops. The Magistrate ordered possession of the land to be restored to the complainant, but attached the crops under Ch XLIII of the Criminal Procedure Code Thereupon one P intervened, and claimed the crops as having been sown by himself His claim was disallowed, and the crops were ordered to be sold and the proceeds credited to Government under ss. 523 and 524 of the Code Held that the order made by the Magistrate under s 522 restoring possession of the land to the complainant was bad because it did not appear that the offence of which the accused was convicted was attended with criminal force, and that the dispossession was due to the use of such force. The illegal entry complained of had taken place in July 1897. The accused then took possession, and in September, being then still in possession, forcibly resisted the complainant when he attempted to enter upon the land. The complainant, however, did not charge the accused with this assault, but with the trespass which had taken place in July. It is only when the actual use of criminal force leads to dispossession that an order under s. 522 can be made. Held also that the order passed under ss. 523 and 524 with reference to the crops were illegal. The crops were not property in respect of which the offence was committed, nor were they used in the commission of the offence. They were not such property as is referred to in s. 517, 523, or 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held also that the Third Class Magistrate as such had no authority to make an order under s. 524. Had it done so, the question would have been whether there was anything to prevent it from being a power, in the discretion of the donee of it, to indorse the note, and convert it into one payable to bearer, whenever he thought fit to do so, for any purpose. It was not laid down in the judgment in those cases that the words used in a power-of-attorney, to express its objects, are always to be construed disjunctively, though they may be so construed; and there is no reason why a rule of construction, intended to aid in arriving at the meaning of the parties, should not be applied in construing a power-of-attorney as much as any other document. (I of 1879), s. 5.—It is not necessary for the Courts in India to consider whether a power-of-attorney issued in England, but which is intended to operate in British India, complies with the fiscal requirements of the stamp laws in England. It is the duty of the Court under that section to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate the other side, but not to determine at that stage what questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. Where an ex-parte order is made in chambers giving leave to interrogate, the party ordered to answer has a right to come into Court to have the order set aside if the case is one in which interrogatories should not have been allowed. When an order for the administration of interrogatories is properly made, a party objecting to the interrogatories administered may, at his peril, omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects; but the more prudent course is to file his affidavit in answer, stating in it his objections to answer such questions as he objects to. Where interrogatories are scandalous, or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court may interfere at any stage. The defendant bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made. Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms: "State how your estimate of damages to the amount of R1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?" Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory, the defendant bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it. If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined. Upon the application of the respondent in a second appeal pending before the High Court, an order was passed requiring the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the appeal, and to lodge such security at any time before the hearing. This order purported to be made under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, but neither the application nor the order stated the amount of the security required. At the hearing of the appeal, no security having been lodged, the respondent objected that, with reference to the terms of s. 549, the Court had no option but to dismiss the appeal. Held that the proper course was to have applied to the Judge who passed the order for security, at any time before the case came on for hearing, for the rejection of the appeal, and that it was too late at the hearing to ask the Court to reject the appeal. 2. ——— Right and interest of co-sharer in estate in Sylhet—Substitution of claimant for actual purchaser—Act XXIII of 1861, s 14—The right and interest of a co-sharer in an estate in Sylhet being put up for sale in execution of a decree, the petitioner claimed the right of pre emption under s 14, Act XXIII of 1861, and he was thereupon substituted for the actual purchaser. Held that in such circumstances the Court executing a decree had no authority to substitute the claimant for the actual purchaser without the consent of the latter, and that a party claiming a share under the section cited was simply in the position of a party who, having a right of pre emption, has observed the requisite formalities to enable him to assert the right, and must resort to a civil suit to obtain the benefit thereof. 11. ———— Transfer by lease—Alienation or transfer of proprietary right.—Held that a provision in the wajib-ul-urz securing a right of pre-emption to the sharers in cases of sale or mortgage was not applicable to transfer by lease, which was not such an alienation as was contemplated by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, viz., alienation or transfer of proprietary rights. SHEO LALL SAHOO v. RUMZANEE . . . . . . 2 Agra, 35

14. ———— Exchange of property—Transfer giving right of pre-emption—Consideration.—A share in a mouzah, together with the dwelling-house of the proprietor, was exchanged for a share and dwelling-house in another mouzah. Held that the transaction, being an exchange of property, was a sale, and that the right to purchase the land, but not the house, was claimable by a co-sharer by right of pre-emption. The consideration payable by the pre-emptor is the estimated value of the property given in exchange, and not that of the property claimed. SEWA RAM v. RISAL CHOWDHRY [1 Agra, 144

16. ————Transfer under compromise and decree thereon to person claiming pre-emption—Wajib-ul-urz.—An appeal having been preferred from a decree in a suit for pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urz of a village, the parties to the suit entered into a compromise whereby the plaintiff-pre-emptor relinquished his claim to a part of the property in dispute in favour of the defendants-vendees, and the latter admitted his claim with respect of the remainder of the property. Upon this compromise a decree was passed. Subsequently a co-sharer in the village where the property was situate brought a suit for pre-emption, upon the contention that the compromise and the decree passed thereon amounted to a transfer to the plaintiff in

All that the claimant was bound to do was to establish that he was a pattidar within the meaning of the section in the estate of which the property sold formed part, and that he had fulfilled the conditions of sale. If he established this, the sale should be confirmed in his favour, unless some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was shown which would justify the setting aside of the sale. When the whole of the purchase-money has been paid by the claimant within due time, the Court executing the decree, unless it is satisfied that he has no right to advance the claim, cannot treat the payment by him as a nullity, but must accept it as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale respecting the purchase-money, and the sale is not defeasible by the failure of the bidder to complete the deposit of the purchase-money. The sale to the claimant cannot become absolute until it has been confirmed, and until it has become absolute, he cannot maintain a suit for possession. 29. ——— Sale in execution of decree.—During the minority of two out of four brothers an ikrarnama was entered into between them to the effect that no separation was to take place without the consent of all, and that, if one of them separated without such consent, he was to forfeit his share of the family property, and that, if any one wished to dispose of his share, he was to give his brothers the preference. One F purchased at a private sale the share of M, one of the brothers. On this two of the brothers, A and I, brought a suit against F to set aside the sale as contrary to the terms of the ikrarnama, and urged their claim to pre-emption. The suit was decreed with a stipulation that the purchase-money should be paid back. This not having been done, F sued M, got a decree, and in execution put up for sale M's rights and interests in the family estate, bought them himself, and took possession. The present suit is by A and I to recover possession on the ground that M had no rights and interests left which could be sold in execution. Held that, as M had never separated, his share had not been forfeited, and that the only other privilege left to the plaintiffs under the ikrar, viz., pre-emption, could not be exercised, inasmuch as M had not sold his share, the sale having been the act of the Court. One of the co-sharers brought a suit for pre-emption which the vendee-defendant resisted on ground that he also was a co-sharer in the mehal, and the plaintiff had therefore no preferential right. One of two co-sharers, entitled to equal shares in an inheritance, having taken possession of the whole, was used by the other for her share, with mesne profits from the date of the suit. To provide costs, the latter had sold to her co-plaintiffs the right to claim half of her share. The defences were—(1) relinquishment of her claim in favour of the defendant; (2) that the defendant had a right of pre-emption as to part, in consequence of the above transaction; (3) that the share in dispute was subject to a proportion of the debts due from the estate of the deceased, chargeable on the whole inheritance; and that, if the plaintiffs should be held to be entitled to a decree, they should also be declared liable to pay, according to shares, their part of all the debts of the deceased liquidated by the defendant, as well as a proportion of money which he had expended, in good faith, in litigation for the protection of the inheritance. As to (1), the two Courts below concurred in the finding that no relinquishment had taken place. As to (2), it was pointed out that there had been no attempt to sell a share of the inheritance, but only to sell a share in a suit; and it was held that the position taken up by the defendant was inconsistent with his claiming to pre-empt, so that pre-emption was inapplicable. As to (3), it was held that, although the plaintiffs could not have a decree for mesne profits during the whole period of the defendant's possession, yet, if any account was to be taken of the defendant's payments, it must also be taken of his receipts; and it was held that the incidental benefit to the plaintiffs who had not authorized the litigation, in which expense had been incurred, did not give rise to any implied contract on their part, or render them liable in equity for any portion of that expense. 51. ——— Meaning of the terms "Patti" and "Patti of mehal"—Co-sharers—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 166, 168, 188—N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 177—Interpretation of statutes.—The expression "pati of a mehal" as used in s. 188 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) means a division of a mehal distinct from the share of an individual co-sharer. The right of pre-emption, therefore, which is given by the above-named section is not exerciseable on the sale merely of the share of an individual co-sharer not amounting to such a division of a mehal. Moreover, the provisions of s 188 of Act XIX of 1873 do not apply to a sale under s. 168 of the same Act of land other than that in respect of which the arrears which it is sold to satisfy accrued. Hence, where the share of a co-sharer in an imperfect pattidari village, not being the land in respect of which the arrears of rent, for the satisfaction of which the said share is sold, are due, is sold under the provisions of s. 177 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such sale. So held by EDGE, C.J., and YOUNG, J., MAHMOOD, J., contra. There being no statutory definition of the word patti, that word must be taken in its ordinary acceptation, and in that acceptation it means the share of a pattidar, whether such share amounts to a definite division of a mehal or not. The exigencies of the law of pre-emption require that in s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873, the word patti should be construed in its broader signification as equivalent to any share of a pattidar. The words of s. 168, which provide that land sold under that section is to be proceeded against "as if it were the land on account of which the revenue is due under the provisions of this Act," render the incidents of sales under s. 166, including pre-emption applicable to sales under s. 168, with the exception that in such case only the defaulter's interest in the land sold passes by the sale. Hence a right of pre-emption would accrue under s. 188 in respect of the compulsory sale of any share of a co-sharer, though such share did not amount to a patti in the sense of a definite division of a mehal. 53. ——— Effect of perfect partition—Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—Purchase of equity of redemption by mortgagee in possession—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel.—The wajib-ul urz of three villages which originally formed a single mehal gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers in case of transfers of shares to strangers. Afterwards the shares in these villages were made the subject of a perfect partition and divided into separate mehals. Subsequently, by two deeds of sale executed on the 13th January 1884, and registered on the 17th January 1884, some of the original co-sharers sold to strangers their shares in all three villages. At the time of the sale, the shares in two of the villages were in possession of the vendees under a possessory mortgage, the amount due upon which was set off against the purchase money. The share in the third village was, at the time of the sale, in possession of another of the original co-sharers under a [illegible]. On the 17th January 1885 this [illegible] sharer brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz in respect of the shares sold in the three villages. Held that, notwithstanding the partition of the village into separate mehals, the existing wajib-ul-urz at the time of partition must be presumed to subsist and govern the separate mehals until it was shown that a new one had been made. Gokal Singh v. *Mannu Lal, I. L. the same patui as the vendor. The deed contained a specification of the interests purchased and the considerations paid by the co-sharers and the stranger vendees respectively. In a suit for pre-emption by certain co-sharers of the same patti as the vendor, the lower Appellate Court held that, although the co-sharers-vendees had a pre-emptive right of the same degree as the plaintiffs, nevertheless they, having joined a stranger with them in purchasing the property, had forfeited their right, and could not resist the claim even in respect of such portions as they had purchased under the sale-deed. Held that this view was erroneous, and that, inasmuch as the deed of sale contained an exact specification of the shares purchased by the co-sharers-vendees, who had an equal right of purchase to that of the plaintiffs in respect of such shares, and as the shares purchased and the consideration paid by the stranger vendee were also exactly specified, the lower Court should not have decreed the claim for pre-emption as to that portion of the property which had been purchased by the co-sharers. 67. ———— Claim based upon custom—Evidence afforded by obsolete wajib-ul-urz—Rules of the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts (B. E. C., 8—1, s. 38).—The plaintiffs brought their suit in 1890 to pre-empt certain property situated in the Gorakhpur district. Their claim was based upon two grounds: one, an alleged contract said to be recorded in and proved by a wajib-ul-urz of 1860 relating to the village in question; and the other, a custom of pre-emption alleged to be existing in the village. The period during which the wajib-ul-urz of 1860 was in force expired prior to the sale which gave rise to the right of pre-emption sought to be enforced. Subsequently to the expiration of that wajib-ul-urz, certain rules had been framed, with reference to the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the material portions of which, for the purposes of the present case, were as follows: "A memorandum of the village customs will be appended to each khewat by the Assistant Settlement Officer, when he verifies the jamabandi, and it will take the place of the document hitherto known as the wajib-ul-urz" * * * "In regard to any custom or constitution peculiar to the mehal, the following matters should be noticed [class (d), s. 25]: (a) Pre-emption (as regards mehals which belong to other than Mahomedan proprietors) when the proprietors expressly demand that it may be noted and proved conclusively that the custom exists." At the new settlement made in accordance with these rules, no mention of the right of pre-emption as obtaining in the mehal in question was recorded. Upon these facts it was held by EDGE, C.J., and BURKITT, J., that having regard to the rules above-mentioned framed by the Board of Revenue for the

in a conditional vendee, even though he might not have obtained a decree establishing or declaring his right, and the right of pre-emption accrued on the date when the conditional sale thus became absolute, yet foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation, being of a purely ministerial character, were not conclusive or even primâ facie evidence in a subsequent litigation against the conditional vendor that a valid foreclosure had been duly effected; that strict observance of the requirements of the Regulation were conditions precedent to the right of foreclosure; and that, in the present case, as the plaintiff had not asserted or attempted to prove that all those requirements had been fulfilled so as to result in an actual foreclosure and consequent accrual of pre-emption at the end of the year of grace, no foreclosure was shown to have taken place prior to the compromise of the 19th September 1885, and the plaintiff's right of pre-emption accrued on and must be referred to that date, and consequently extended only to the property to which the compromise related, and the price payable by the plaintiff was the amount specified in the compromise. Bhadu Mahomed v. *Radha Churn Bolia, 4 B. The said wajib-ul-urz contained a clause relative to pre-emptive rights to the following effect: "When any muafidar in the patti desires to transfer his share, then first a shareholder in the patti takes it, and if he does not take it, then another man who desires to take it takes it." Held that this clause was declaratory of the village custom, and that it was not intended thereby to adopt the Mahomedan law of pre emption. property. If the term of the mortgaged share of any co-sharer is about to expire and notice of foreclosure has been issued, and the co-sharer mortgagor has not the means to redeem, then another co-sharer, after paying up the money, may take back the share, and when the original mortgagor has the means, he, after paying the money, may take possession of the share. Held that, in the case of a conditional sale of property to which this wajib-ul-urz applied, there were only two stages contemplated by the wajib-ul-urz, and not three. The first stage was at or about the time of the execution of the deed of conditional sale, and at that time pre-emption might be had by a co-sharer at the rate indicated in the wajib-ul-urz. The second stage was when the conditional vendee had brought his suit for foreclosure, and at that time the pre-emptor would have to pay the amount found to be due under the deed of conditional sale. 93. ———— Partition, Effect of—Co-sharers—"Village"—Effect of perfect partition on covenants contained in the wajib-ul-urz.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village contained a covenant among the co-sharers that, in the event of any one of them selling his share, a right of pre-emption should be enforceable, first, by a "near shareholder"; next, by a partner in the thoke; and thirdly, by a partner in the village. The village was subsequently divided into three separate mehals by means of a perfect partition under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873). Held that the agreement regarding pre-emption remained in force after the partition. The term "village," as used in the wajib-ul-urz, means a definite area of land with houses upon it, and does not necessarily imply a joint ownership of such land, inasmuch as after partition there may remain some community of interest, and things held and used in common by all the inhabitants. 99. ——— Simple mortgage—"Transfer"—Mortgage—Charge—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 58.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers on a transfer (intikal) by sale or mortgage (rahn) by a co-sharer of "rights and interests" (hakkiyat). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—That as a simple mortgage, as defined in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, by giving a right to sell, transfers an interest in the property mortgaged, a simple mortgage of his share by a co-sharer created a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz Per MAHMOOD, J.—The circumstance that possession had not been transferred to the mortgagee was one which had no bearing on the question whether a right of pre-emption arose under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. The word "intikal," as used in Hindustani, has the broadest meaning in connection with "alienation," "conveyance," "assignment," or "transfer" of rights in immoveable property. The word "hakkiyat" means rights and interests in the legal sense of the phrase. The word "rahn" is a generic word indicating all that is included in the English word "mortgage," and is not limited to usufructuary mortgages, but includes simple mortgages also. When general words are used in a document, they must be understood in a general sense, unless they are accompanied by any expression limiting or restricting their ordinary meaning, or unless such limitation or restriction arises from necessary implication. The words "intikal," "hakkiyat," and "rahn" in the wajib-ul-urz could be understood only in the most general sense. "Mortgage," as understood in Indian law, includes simple mortgage as well as usufructuary, and one is as much a "transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" as the other. A simple mortgage is a "transfer," being the transfer of the right of sale. Held, therefore, by MAHMOOD, J., that a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage by a co-sharer of his share to a "stranger." Per BRODHURST, J., that one of the entries in a statement showing the transfers which had taken place in the village at or about the time the wajib-ul-urz was framed, which statement was connected with the wajib-ul-urz, related to a simple mortgage, from which it appeared that it was the intention that the co-sharers should have the right of pre-emption in all cases of mortgage, whether usufructuary or otherwise, and therefore a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul urz in the case of a simple mortgage. Per DUTHOIT, J., that a pre-emptive right was raised by the terms of the wajib-ul urz only upon the occurrence of a transfer of a share in the property of the mehal, and a simple mortgage was not a transfer of property. OLDFIELD, J.—The word "transfer" used in the wajib-ul-urz was not intended to refer to a simple mortgage, but to mortgages where possession of the property passes to the mortgagee. One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for R300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Per PETHERAM, C.J., that the terms of the wajib-ul-urz meant that, if any co-sharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the

99. ———— Simple mortgage—"Transfer"—Mortgage—Charge—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 58.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers on a transfer (intikal) by sale or mortgage (rahn) by a co-sharer of "rights and interests" (hakkiyat). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—That as a simple mortgage, as defined in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, by giving a right to sell, transfers an interest in the property mortgaged, a simple mortgage of his share by a co-sharer created a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The circumstance that possession had not been transferred to the mortgagee was one which had no bearing on the question whether a right of pre-emption arose under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. The word "intikal," as used in Hindustani, has the broadest meaning in connection with "alienation," "conveyance," "assignment," or "transfer" of rights in immoveable property. The word "hakkiyat" means rights and interests in the legal sense of the phrase. The word "rahn" is a generic word indicating all that is included in the English word "mortgage," and is not limited to usufructuary mortgages, but includes simple mortgages also. When general words are used in a document, they must be understood in a general sense, unless they are accompanied by any expression limiting or restricting their ordinary meaning, or unless such limitation or restriction arises from necessary implication. The words "intikal," "hakkiyat," and "rahn" in the wajib-ul-urz could be understood only in the most general sense. "Mortgage," as understood in Indian law, includes simple mortgage as well as usufructuary, and one is as much a "transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" as the other. A simple mortgage is a "transfer," being the transfer of the right of sale. Held, therefore, by MAHMOOD, J., that a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage by a co-sharer of his share to a "stranger." Per BRODHURST, J., that one of the entries in a statement showing the transfers which had taken place in the village at or about the time the wajib-ul-urz was framed, which statement was connected with the wajib-ul-urz, related to a simple mortgage, from which it appeared that it was the intention that the co-sharers should have the right of pre-emption in all cases of mortgage, whether usufructuary or otherwise, and therefore a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. Per DUTHOIT, J., that a pre-emptive right was raised by the terms of the wajib-ul urz only upon the occurrence of a transfer of a share in the property of the mehal, and a simple mortgage was not a transfer of property. OLDFIELD, J.—The word "transfer" used in the wajib-ul-urz was not intended to refer to a simple mortgage, but to mortgages where possession of the property passes to the mortgagee. One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for R300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Per PETHERAM, C.J., that the terms of the wajib-ul-urz meant that, if any co-sharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the

One of the co-sharers, without first offering his share to the other co-sharers, sold it to a stranger, for a price higher than that which would be payable according to the above-mentioned provision. A suit for pre-emption was brought by a co-sharer against the vendor and the purchaser, and the plaintiff claimed the benefit of the sale upon payment of a sum calculated according to the condition of the wajib-ul-urz relating to sales between co-sharers. Held by the Full Bench that the condition of the wajib-ul-urz regarding the price to be paid for the share was still binding on the land, notwithstanding the sale; that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share at the price agreed before it could be sold to anyone else, and in case of sale to a stranger could call on the vendor and the purchaser to hand it over on payment of such price; and that, if the stranger vendee had paid more than was payable according to the wajib-ul-urz, he was entitled to recover it from the vendor. Akbar Singh v. Juala Singh, Weekly Notes, All., 1885, p. 216, distinguished by TYRRELL, J. IV, c. 71.*—In a suit to [illegible] and [illegible] in [illegible] of prescription is thus claimed in England prior to the passing of the Prescription Act. Although the enjoyment of light and air as of right for upwards of thirty years is evidence from which an enjoyment from time immemorial may be presumed, yet, inasmuch as the period of legal memory is about 700 years, the claim by prescription in this country is defeated by the fact that English law has only been introduced here for about 100 years. Where an easement has been enjoyed for upwards of twenty years, the presumption of a grant is a question of fact, and not of law. Distinction drawn between positive and negative servitudes. Held by PEACOCK, C.J.—A right to air may be acquired by express grant, but it cannot be acquired merely by presumption arising from user, whether the presumption is a presumption of prescription or not. The only amount of light which can be claimed by prescription or by length of enjoyment, without an actual grant, is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. The uninterrupted enjoyment of light for twenty years acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement raises a presumption of right which, in the absence of any evi- [illegible]

44 —————— Obstruction of right to light and air—Suit for injunction or damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s 54 —The plaintiff was the owner of a house in Jambulwadi Street in Bombay The defendant owned a house to the east of it and between the two houses was a gully three feet seven inches wide the part of which next the defendant's house was a gutter On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows and on the first floor two windows, all looking out into the gully and all of them ancient windows. The defendant's house originally was a little higher than the plaintiff's house, and consisted of a groundfloor a first floor and a loft. Shortly before suit, the defendant pulled down this house and on the same site began to build a new four storied house with a loft The plaintiff sued for an injunction, alleging that this new house which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows and cause him material damage there being no other window in his house on the side next the defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice, and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that, even if the passage had not been widened, there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice, paid into Court R200, which, he said, was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff. After filing the suit, the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction at the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the cause should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5 inches, and in addition to this a considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it; that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances, the lower Court, looking at the house as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house, which had been built since that time. On appeal,—Held that, although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material, and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used. The Appeal Court therefore varied the decree of STARLING, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff R500 as damages. This promise was that the owner of the house would make no objection to the blocking up of the windows in question when the owner of the building opposite should rebuild it and raise it to a higher elevation. The owner of the windows accepted this promise. After the lapse of twenty years, the defendant, having given notice that he would act on the agreement, proceeded to rebuild; and he raised his building higher than the old one, causing the obstruction of which the plaintiff now complained. The High Court (FARRAN, J.) in its Original Jurisdiction decided that the case was not one for an injunction, but for damages, and gave the plaintiff a decree for a sum as compensation. On appeal, the Appellate Bench of the High Court (PARSONS and STRACHEY, JJ.) held that the plaintiff had made out no prescriptive right to light and air, and the cases of Dhanjibhoy v. *Lisboa, I. Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, that there having been a continuing agreement between the parties within the meaning of expl. 1 of the Easement Act, 1882, the acquirement by the plaintiff of an easement by prescription had been prevented. From the agreement it was apparent that the enjoyment of light and air had not been granted as an easement. SULTAN NAWAZ JUNG v RUSTOMJI NANABHOY BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY I. L. R., 24 Bom., 156 only amount of light for a dwelling house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house Rule laid down in Bagram v Khettranath Karformah, 3 B L R, O C, 41 followed The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling houses by building on adjoining land the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house, in other words to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze as such The "45 degree rule" is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration and is especially valuable when the proof of the obscuration is not definite or satisfactory DELHI AND LONDON BANK v HEM LAL DUTT . treating the case as if it fell under s 26 of the Limitation Act and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open, and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, gave the plaintiff a decree Held that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s 26 of the Limitation Act is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired, but an easement may also be acquired by implied grant In the present case the use of the path might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement in which case there would be an easement of necessity, or the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement CHARU SURNOKAR v DOKOURI CHUNDER THAKOOR [I. user of the right of way over the lane to the door, until he had the door bricked up. In April 1865 the house was sold by H C, and in June 1867 was conveyed by the purchaser to the plaintiff. From the blocking up of the door until the plaintiff's purchase no user was proved. The suit was brought in June 1875, about a month after the erection by the defendant of the obstruction complained of. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the owner of the dominant tenement having, with the intention of preventing the use of the way, created an obstruction of a permanent nature which rendered such use impossible, the way could not be said, during the continuance of such obstruction, to have "been openly enjoyed" within the meaning of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, and that accordingly, though there had been no interruption within the meaning of that section, a right to the way had not been established under the Act.
